Ancient Reminiscences of Quincy.

Among the many improvements in this town, none are more worthy of special notice
than the elegant mansion recently erected by Mr. William S. Perry, on the estate purchased of the heirs of Mr. John Greenleaf. This beautiful structure is an ornament to the town and neighborhood, and a worthy prototype of its ancient, renowned,
and venerable predecessor. It was a source of great regret to the other citizens of the town, when the old landmark that formerly occupied this site was removed, it having stood there from their earliest recollection,
and years before; and many happy reminiscences of their youthful days were vividly brought to mind whenever they visited this memorable locality. It is with grateful pleasure they congratulate the present proprietor upon having constructed a house
over the same site, and upon the same cellar,
and in the main, a similar building, having only modernized it by a little extra finish.

The mansion that stood upon this site as far as we have been able to learn, was erected by Mr. Josiah Adams about 1730;
one hundred and twenty-eight years ago.
He was a large landholder in town at that time, having also a large estate on the opposite side of the road, a part of which he sold to Dr. Henry Turner. Mr. Adams sold the above house and land to Mr. Hubbard, a merchant of Boston; who disposed of it to Mr.
Lewis Vassall. After the death of Mr. Vassall, which occurred in 1743, this estate was purchased by his executor, Mr. Richard Bull, of Boston, by Mr. James Virchold, of St. Christopher's Island, he remained here
until the American Revolution commenced.
Being a royalist, he was obliged to leave the country. At the time he left, this estate was leased to the Hon. Richard Cranch. The general impression that this property was confiscated, and that Mr. Cranch held it by right of possession, in an error, as can be seen by the Probate Records. The heirs of Mr. Virchold came here about 1808, and claimed it—Mr. Cranch admitted their claim and purchased the premises of them for thirteen hundred dollars. It has remained in the family ever since, until sold last year to the present proprietor.

In connection with this, we shall make a few statements concerning some of the families that have resided on the old domain.
Hans Richard Cranch was born November, 1726, in Kingsbridge, near Exeter, in Devonshire, England. He was one of six sons, and was bound as an apprentice to a maker
of wool cards; but at the age of twenty,
purchased the remainder of his time, and came to this country in 1746, with General Palmer, who married his sister. This is the General Palmer, who, with Mr. Quincy roasted an ox for the great festival prepared for the reception of the German Glass Manufacturers at that part of Quincy, now called Germantown. Mr. Cranch married Mary,
the eldest daughter of the Rev. William Smith, of Weymouth, and granddaughter of Col. John Quincy, and sister of Abigail, who became the wife of President John Adams. In April, 1775, he removed from Boston to Braintree, now Quincy, where he resided until his death. He died on the 16th and his wife on the 17th of October, 1811; Both were buried on the same day,
the 19th. His ancestors, were dissenters and firm republicans. John Cranch, the naturalist, who was, at the recommendation of Sir Joseph Banks, sent out in the expedition to Egypt, where he died, was his second cousin.
He received an honorary degree, of M. A., from Harvard University, was elected a member of the American Academy of Arts

and Sciences; also sustained several important public offices, and was for many years
a member of both branches of the Legislature and Judge of the Court of Common Pleas. At the time the North Precinct of Braintree was incorporated into a distinct town, 1792,
Rev. Anthony Whild, minister of the First Congregational Church, was asked to give a name to the place, but declining the request, a similar offer was made to the Hon.
Richard Cranch, who readily complied, and suggested its being called Quincy, in honor of Colonel John Quincy, who had been the owner of the Mount Wollaston Farm, which had given the first civilized name to the place. This generally met the views of the citizens, and was by them accepted; not without, however, considerable opposition.
A Committee was chosen to procure a name for the town, and reported the following, for consideration: Wollaston, Coddington and Hancock—but finally decided upon the honorable name the town now bears.

As a Justice of the Peace, he issued the first warrant for a public town meeting, after the incorporation; also was chosen moderator of the first meeting called to transact town business. Judge Cranch possessed a strong and comprehensive mind, was deeply learned in the sciences, and a great theologian.
Judge Cranch, late of Washington, (D. C.)
son of the above, was born at Weymouth,
July 17th, 1769; graduated at Harvard College, 1787; he then entered the office of Judge Dawes, of Boston, where he read law
for three years, and was then admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas.
He opened an office at Braintree, now Quincy.
At the close of one year he was induced by his friends to remove to Haverhill.
In 1800, Judge Cranch was appointed one of the Commissioners of the City of Washington, which office he resigned in 1801,
when he was appointed by President Adams,
the Junior Assistant Judge of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia. In 1805, President Jefferson appointed Judge Cranch
to the office of Chief Justice, which office
he held until his death.

In 1795, he was connected in marriage
with Nancy Greenleaf, daughter of the late William Greenleaf, of Boston. They were the parents of thirteen children. He published nine volumes of the Reports of Cases
in the Supreme Court of the United States;
also, a Memoir of the Life and Character of President John Adams. Judge Cranch was a member of the American Academy of Arts
and Sciences, and of the American Antiquarian Association; he also received the degree of Doctor of Laws from Harvard University.

We now pass to the Vassall family.—
The ancestor of this family, Major Lewis Vassall, came from the West Indies to New England, and settled in this town. He lived and died in the house of President John Adams. Mr. John Vassall graduated at Harvard College, 1732, and became a merchant in Boston. Mr. William Vassall, son of Major Vassall, was High Sheriff of the County of Middlesex, and a graduate of Harvard University, 1733. There were several of the same family who received degrees from the above institution. This family of Vassall have been extinct in this town near a century. In the old Cambridge Church ground, is to be found the tomb of the Vas-salls, which is marked by a free stone tablet, supported by five pillars, and bearing nothing but a sculptured relief of the globe
and the sun—vas, sol,—which designates
a powerful family, now almost forgotten.

Mr. Lewis Vassall, once owner of the above estate, was a graduate of Harvard College, in 1732; died Sept. 13, 1743, aged 31; Dorothy, his wife, died Aug. 25th, 1746, aged 28; they lie buried in the Episcopalian Church burying ground, opposite to where they resided.

The following is a correct list of furniture
and merchandise in the old mansion house,

* It is said that High Sheriff Vassall superintended the execution of a man at Cambridge. Very likely. As the law in those days was strictly complied with. But in these days of morbid philanthropy, modernized and civilized judiciary, and Executive clemency, a few years of quiet rest in our State Penitentiary is all the penalty required for the culprit,
who has committed one of the most heinous crimes known.

† It must be remembered that the paper money in New England had depreciated very much.

‡ This estate is now held by the heirs of Gen. Taylor. Upon this farm, once resided Dr. Wilson, the first physician who practiced medicine in this town, that we have any knowledge. The venerable house in which he resides is still standing.

§ Dr. Stedman formerly practiced of Wood and Swamp land was located in the South part Quincy, and for many years was called Stedman's Swamp, the wood land now goes by the name of Birch Lake, having been changed from its original and true name, Virchold. Mr. James Virchold having once owned the land, from whom it derived its name. All of this estate is now in the possession of the Hon. Charles F. Adams.

Miscellaneous.

The Calico Cloak.

Have you seen the new scholar? asked
Mary Lark, a girl of twelve or fourteen years,
as she ran to meet a group of schoolmates
who were coming towards the school-house;
she cuts the most comical looking figure you ever saw. Her cloak is made out of calico, and her shoes are brogans, such as men and boys wear.

O yes, I've seen her, replied Lucy Brooks;
she is the new washer-woman's daughter. I shouldn't have thought Mr. Brown would have taken her into the academy; but I suppose it is like the money that comes through suds as well as any. It is cleaner, of course.
And the air rang with the loud laugh of the girls.

Come, let us go in and examine her, continued Mary, as they ascended the steps of the school-house; I am thinking she will make some fun for us.

The girls went into the dressing-room,
where they found the new scholar. She was a mild intelligent looking child, but very poorly, though tidily clad. The girls went around her, whispering and laughing with each other while she stood trembling and blushing in one corner of the room, without venturing to raise her eyes from the floor.

When they entered school they found the little girl was far in advance of those of her age, in her studies, and was placed in classes with those two or three years her senior.
This seemed, on the whole, to make those girls who were disposed to treat her unkindly dislike her the more; and she, being of a retiring disposition, through their influence had no friends, but went and returned from school alone.

And so you really think, said Mary Lark,
(she went up to the little girl a few weeks after she entered the school,) that you are going to get the medal? It will correspond nicely with your cloak!

And she caught hold of the cape, and held
it out from her, while the girls around joined in her loud laugh.

Calico cloak get the medal! I guess she will! I should like to see Mr. Brown giving it to her! said another girl, as she caught hold of her arm, and peeped under the child's bonnet.

The little girl struggled to release herself,
and when she was free, ran home as fast as she could go.

Oh, mother! she said, as she entered her mother's humble kitchen, do answer Uncle William's letter, and tell him we will come to New York to live! I don't like to live in Bridgeville. The girls call me "Calico Cloak," and "Brogan," and you don't know
mother, how unkindly they treat me.

Lizzie, my dear, said her mother, you must expect to meet with some who will treat you unkindly on account of your poverty; but you must not be discouraged. Do right, my child, and you will eventually come off
conqueror.

Although Mrs. Lee tried to encourage her child, yet she knew that she had to meet with severe trials for one so young.

But, mother, they are all unkind to me, replied Lizzie; there isn't one who loves me.

And the child buried her face in her hands
and sobbed aloud.

In Bridgeville Academy there were a few selfish, unprincipled girls; and the others
joined them in teasing the little "Calico Cloak," as they called her, from thoughtless-ness, and from a love of sport. But they knew not how deeply each sportive word pierced the heart of the little stranger, and how many bitter tears she shed in secret over their unkindness.

Mrs. Lee, learning that the scholars still continued their unjust treatment towards her child, resolved to accept her brother's invitation, although he was a poor man, and became a member of his family, hoping that while there, her child could continue her studies, and perhaps, through his influence,
lead a happier life among her schoolmates.
Accordingly, at the end of the term, she left Bridgeville, and removed to New York. Although Lizzie had been a member of the school but one term, yet she gained the medal, and it was worn from the academy
beneath the despised garment.

Weeks, months and years glided away to the students of Bridgeville Academy, and the little "Calico Cloak" was forgotten.— Those who were at school with her had left, to enter upon the business of life.

Twelve years after Mrs. Lee and her daughter left town, a Mr. Maynard, a young clergyman, came into Bridgeville, and was settled as the pastor of the village church.
It was reported at the sewing circle, the week following his ordination, that it was expected that he would bring his bride into town in a few weeks. There was a great curiosity to see her, and, especially, after it was reported she was a talented young authoress.

A few weeks after, Mr. Maynard gratified their curiosity by walking into church with his young wife leaning on his arm. She was a lady of great intellectual beauty, and everybody (as they always are at first,) was deeply interested in the young minister and his wife.

The following week, the ladies flocked to see her, and she promised to meet with them at the next gathering of the sewing circle.

The day arrived, and, although it was quite stormy, Mrs. Deacon Brown's parlor was filled with smiling faces. The deacon's carriage was sent to the parsonage after Mrs.
Maynard, and, in due time, it arrived, bringing the lady with it. The shaking of hands, that followed her arrival can only be imagined by those who have been present on such an occasion.

How are you pleased with our village?
asked a Mrs. Britton, after the opening exercises were over, as she took a seat beside Mrs. Maynard.

I like its appearance very much, it certainly has improved wonderfully within the last twelve years.

Were you ever in Bridgeville before? asked another lady, as those around looked somewhat surprised.

I was here a few months, when a child, replied Mrs. Maynard.

Her curiosity was excited.
Have you friends here? asked a third, after a moment's silence.

I have not. I resided with my mother,
the Widow Lee. We lived in a little cottage which stood upon the spot now occupied by the large store, on the corner of Pine Street.

The Widow Lee? repeated Mrs. Britton;
I well remember the cottage, but I do not recollect the name.

I think I attended school with you at the academy, replied Mrs. Maynard; you were Miss Mary Lark, were you not?

That was my name, replied the lady, as a smile passed over her features at being recognized; but I am really quite ashamed that my memory has proved so recalcitrant.

I was known in the academy as the little "Calico Cloak." Perhaps you can remember me by that name.

The smile faded from Mrs. Britton's face,
and a deep blush overspread her features,
which in a few moments after was seen deepening upon the faces of others present.

There was a silence for some minutes;
when Mrs. Maynard looked up, she found
she had caused considerable disturbance
among the ladies of her own age, by making herself known.

O! I remember very well when the little "Calico Cloak" went to the academy, said
an old lady, as she looked up over her glasses, and I think, if my memory serves me right, some of the ladies present will owe
Mrs. Maynard an apology.

I had no intention whatever, ladies, replied
Mrs. Maynard, to reprove any one present by making myself known; but, as it may seem to some that such was my intention, I will add a few words.

Most of the young ladies present will remember the little "Calico Cloak;" but no
one but the wearer knows how deeply each unkind word pierced the little heart that beat beneath it. And, as I again hear the old academy bell ring, it brings back fresh
to my mind the sorrows of my childhood.

But let no lady mistake me, by supposing I cherish an unkind feeling towards any one.

I know that, whatever the past may have been, you are now my friends. But, ladies, let me add, if you have children, learn a lesson from my experience, and teach them to treat kindly the poor and despised. A calico cloak may cover a heart as warm with affection, and as sensitive to sorrow, as one that beats beneath a velvet covering. Whenever you meet a child who shows a disposition to despise the poor, tell it the story of the "Calico Cloak;" it will carry its own moral with it.

That is the shortest, but the best sermon
I ever heard, said the old lady, again, as she put her handkerchief under her glasses; and I do not believe its moral effect will be lost
upon any of us.

The old lady was right. The story went from one to another, until it found its way into the old academy. At that very time a little boy was attending school there, whose

THE QUINCY PATRIOT

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Religious Services in Unitarian Church.

We understand that a notice was given last Sunday, that the Rev. Charles Brooks of Medford, would give an account of the remarkable services of "Holy Week," as seen by him at Rome, in Italy, and supposing that these narratives, by an eye-witness, may have some interest for other citizens of this town than those worshipping in the Unitarian Church, we are authorized to state that a brief notice of these ceremonies will be made the subject of discourse in the afternoon of April 4th, in that Church.

"Holy Week," being the conclusion of Lent, is a season of peculiar solemnity in the Roman Catholic Church, and thousands of travellers from different parts of Europe and America arrange their journeys so as to be at Rome during the week, when the most splendid and imposing services of that Church are conducted in the presence and by the aid of the Pope. "Holy Week" began March 26th, which was Palm Sunday, and ends with Easter Sunday, which is April 4th. Each of these eight days has separate and peculiar solemnities and ceremonies; and a description by one, who witnessed them twice, cannot be otherwise than interesting to Protestants; and in the hands of one, whose language and eloquence is equal to the value and interest of the subject, we predict for the learned divine, who ministered in "holy things," in Hingham, "long time ago," a full and an attentive audience.

THE ORTHODOX SOCIETY. We learn from a reliable source that the Committee of the Evangelical Congregational Society have closed an arrangement with Rev. J. Henry Thayer of Andover, to take charge of the Orthodox Church and Society, in this town, for one year, commencing April 1st.

We are informed that Dr. Storrs of Braintree will preach in this Church to-morrow, Sunday.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE. At a regular meeting of Quincy Stone Division, Sons of Temperance, on Tuesday evening last, the following officers were elected for the ensuing quarter.

George Starbuck, W. P.; C. H. Pray, W. A.; Wm E. McDonald, R. S.; James P. Symonds, A. R. S.; G. W. Hentress, F. S.; W. J. Vinal, T.; T. B. Senbury, C.; W. F. Knox, A. C.; S. Hayden, I. S.; C. L. Baker, O. S.; Dr. George Newcomb, Chaplain.

FIRE AT HINGHAM. Our neighbors at Hingham had rather a serious fire on Wednesday evening last, as it regards property. About 8 o'clock, the barn of Welcome Lincoln, was discovered to be on fire, which soon communicated to an adjoining one, owned and occupied by Mr. Warren Hersey, containing a large quantity of hay, which was entirely consumed, together with a cow and two calves. Our valiant little Company, the Vulture, sprang at the first notice of the alarm, and were early upon the spot, accomplishing the distance, (nearly five miles) in the incredible short time of fifty-five minutes. They came up to the work in fine order, and amid the hearty cheers of the assembled multitude. It was near midnight before they left the ground, arriving home at one o'clock. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, as no light had been used about the premises for some time.

DENTISTRY. It always affords us pleasure to recognize and acknowledge the spirit of a true workman or artist in any branch of useful business. Drs Cummings and Flagg whose office is 25 Tremont street, are dentists who study and exercise their profession in such a spirit. They aim at nothing short of perfection in the important science they undertake to master, and pursue their aim with a steady, ardent, intelligent zeal. We are not using the words of ordinary newspaper commendation, ignorant whereof we speak; personal inspection and experience enable us to offer sincere testimony to the excellence of their treatment and workmanship.

We can conceive of nothing more complete in respect to structure, form, finish, and adaptation, than the artificial teeth they set, or the consideration and gentlemanly attention with which they operate in their general practice.

We understand that the Massachusetts Mechanic Association have awarded several premiums for their work, and we confidently recommend it to the attention of our readers, in city or country, who need any services in this department of Surgery.—Boston Transcript.

DEATH OF THE LATE MRS. COOK.

The following additional particulars in relation to the deceased, are furnished us by the Coroner, Mr. Bass.

That last Saturday evening, about 8 o'clock the body of Bridget Cook of this town, was found lying dead upon the floor of her house, situated on Mount Pleasant; that her daughter, who resides in the West District, coming home at that hour, and seeing her situation, immediately gave the alarm to the neighbors. The last time that she was seen alive, was on Wednesday afternoon, of last week, on Liberty street, much the worse for liquor. A Mr. William Little, a gentleman of no particular locality, (whom the Coroner had some trouble in hunting up,) and of very questionable habits, testified without the least reserve, that on the Tuesday evening, preceding, he was at the house of Mrs. Cook, until daybreak the next morning; that he carried there a quart of rum which they drank in the course of the night; also, that they occupied one bed, and that he frequently got up and gave her liquor and left her alive and well.

Dr. Pattee examined the body, but found no marks of violence.

From the testimony of Little and others, the jury rendered the following verdict:

"That said Bridget Cook came to her death between Wednesday, April 25th, and Saturday evening, the 26th, and that it was caused by intoxication and debauchery."

AUCTION SALE on Friday next, at 10 o'clock, A. M., of valuable property, on the farm lately occupied by Charles Taylor, of this town. Joseph T. French, Auctioneer. See bills of the Sale.

COAL! SUMMER PRICES! Mr. Brackett will be perceived by his advertisement has reduced the price of coal to the summer standard. He has a prime article, to which we would call the attention of consumers.

For the Patriot.

CONGRESS. The Lecompton Constitution was rejected in the House on Tuesday last by a majority of eight; the same number of votes with which it passed the Senate. The friends of the measure of course regret this result—but are sanguine that in the end it must succeed. They are indifferent on which horn of the dilemma the opposition meet their fate. If the bill passes there will be an end to Kansas agitation.—If it does not pass, the best interests of the Territory will rise above party restraint, and demand admission into the Union either in that form or some other. They are heartily sick of the farce which is now playing, especially at their expense. The New York Tribune lets the cat out of the bag. It says, that "an anti Lecompton organization is already formed, to oppose that measure," not from principle, but as an issue for a new party. We think they will find that they have sprung their net a little too soon.

ANOTHER STRIKE. The female operatives in one of the mills of Salem have struck because their wages have been reduced.—If a little of the sympathy which we so lavishly bestow upon others was meted out to our own operatives, we think their condition would be much improved.

"Last fall we had a full crop of large, fine clusters, ripe fully a week before the Concord, and so superior to that variety, that they obtained the prize of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, as the best native grape. It is a most abundant bearer, and has less tendency to rot than our native grape than any other variety. It also possesses a peculiarity which we have not noticed in other sorts. As early as the first of September, when the berries change to a grayish tinge, they are quite sweet and agreeable to the taste, but they do not acquire the high flavor which constitutes its great excellence until they assume their full color, when it is one of the handsomest grapes we have ever seen."

A NEW ARTICLE OF Unrivalled Excellence.

FOR burnishing or polishing all finished Metallic or Glass substances. The superiority of this article, over all others for the purpose named above, has been freely accorded to it by those who have given it a trial. Its rare virtues, and peculiar properties, are singular. It not only removes all dirt or impurities from the objects, but restores to it a beautiful smooth surface and lustre, equal in brilliancy to the new. For it is most admirably adapted.

Silver and Glass Ware, Mirrors especially, and particularly

THE LADIES' TOILET

It needs only to be used once, and no family would be without it.

The ingredient from which the Powder is compounded, is the product of an insect—the labor of ages—and is one of the many useful purposes to which it has been applied by the ingenuity of man. It is a white and delicate substance, free from everything offensive, and is dissolved or absorbed by the metal, leaving no impurities, but a bright and mirror-like surface.

COMPLETE Dental Establishment.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG, SURGEON DENTISTS, 25 Tremont Street, (up stairs.) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a leeching agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decay. By the use of our exclusive, it can be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as permanent. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystallized Gold, teeth not only are restored from decay and partially saved, but are restored to their original form, comfort and use. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pale yellow to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as gold. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists. Boston, Oct 31 1y

THE RUINED MERCHANT,

—OR— A Wife's Extravagance.

BY T. A. CONLEY, OF EAST CAMBRIDGE.

CHAPTER I.

It was on a beautiful moonlight night in the winter of 18—, that Mr. George Edmonds, a dry goods jobber, could have been seen setting in his sleigh, which was standing quietly at the door of his splendid residence on Fifth Avenue, New York, waiting no doubt, for some of his household to join him in a pleasant ride.

Yes, reader, we are right in our conceptions. Do you not see those two ladies and a gentleman stepping into the sleigh and wrapping themselves in the buffalo robes?

The ladies are none other than the extravagant Mrs. Edmonds, herself, and her beautiful and accomplished daughter, Elizabeth, whose sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks denote happiness and joy unspeakable; and the young gentleman, is the only and beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds: a young man of rare talents and fine accomplishments. See those two finely trained cream-colored horses attached to the gandy sleigh; how they neigh and paw the yielding snow under their feet.

Who could not be happy under such circumstances. Broadway is all animation; the moon is round and full; the air is soft and balmy; and joy and gladness is written upon almost every face.

My dear, said Mrs. Edmonds, addressing her husband, whose countenance denoted an inward trouble, I want to call at Mr. Dupres' confectionery store as we go along Broadway.

What do you want to call there for, asked Mr. Edmonds coldly.

I wish to order some of his choicest confectionery and sweet-meats, my dear, for our levee which is to be on next week, was Mrs. E.'s response.

You know, she continued, that Mrs. Simson will be present at our levee and it behooves us to have all things as tastefully arranged as possible. You know, or at least I know, that she is the greatest critic of all my lady acquaintances, and I am sure my daughter, Julia, takes after her in every respect, and I would not for the world have them find fault with me.

I am really tired of these parties, or levees as you call them, said Mr. Edmonds. You know they are always given against my wishes, but you will persist in pleasing yourself and your friends, and you never take into consideration the expenses of those foolish (to me) levees. You have them so often, too, it is really outrageous to think of it. I have a great many bills to meet next week, but I suppose you care nothing at all about that, providing you can—

You are all the time talking about your bills, interrupted his wife, whose face was now the very picture of sourness and anger. I never yet had a little party at my house but what you grumbled and growled like a bear, and always had them bills, bills, on the end of your tongue to mar my pleasures. I am sure we will never miss a few hundred dollars, so pray do not scold about such trifles.

You mean thousands, madam, retorted the husband; and I am sure, if you keep on in this manner, you will make a bankrupt of me ere long—and you call those heavy expenses trifles, too. Well, they may appear so to you, but I can assure you, my dear wife, that I call them enormous trifles, and I will not endure them any longer, so now, that settles the matter.

Why, my dear, responded the extravagant lady, I'm sure they are nothing more than trifles. There are our neighbors, Mrs. Belmont, Mrs. Nottingham, Mrs. Hammond and Mrs. Simson, in particular, they give two levees to my one, and theirs are much more expensive than mine, and their husbands never find fault with them, or scold as you do me.

I wish to hear no more about it, was the husband's brief reply.

Thus ended the conversation between Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds for the time being, and now, reader, we will turn our attention to the listeners, Charles and Elizabeth, their son and daughter, who sat motionless behind their parents during the foregoing dialogue, which I have just narrated.

Are you aware Charles, said Elizabeth, that your favorite, Miss Julia Simson is to be at our levee on Thursday evening next?

Now it is too bad, sister, replied Charles, at the same time pulling up the robe which had fallen to their feet, that you are all the time plaguing me about Miss Simson. You know very well, that she is no favorite of mine. She may suit the taste of others, but with all her wealth and beauty, I defy her to win my heart. In fact, she is too much of a coquette for my taste—there now!

Ah, you say so to me Charles, but I'm sure you cannot mean it, for she is not handsome, accomplished and rich.

Very true, sister, replied Charles, rather indifferently, but with all those qualities I find she is not possessed of a true, warm and womanly heart, and besides she is as vain as the peacock, and that you know would never suit my fancy.

That will do very well to tell me, replied Elizabeth. But you know, brother, you cannot deceive me, for I know how much she likes you. In fact, she has told me so, more than once; but we will talk over this matter some other time.

I wish father would drive faster, for I feel very chilly, said the sister after a pause.

I wish we were at home, replied Charles, who was glad that his sister had changed the subject.

Well, my son, responded his father, your wish will soon be gratified, so saying, he slackened the reins, and used his ivory-mounted whip without stint or measure, which caused the noble-spirited animals to take a sudden flight.

The horses grew more and more unmanageable, and Mr. Edmonds became not a little alarmed for he found that he could not check their speed.

Father! father! exclaimed Charles; the horses are running! Stop them; for God's sake stop them, or else we shall all be killed! But Charles could not utter another word, and leaning over the front seat, tried hard to grasp the reins, but in doing so, he fell out of the sleigh and received a deep wound over his right eye. He was taken up in a state of insensibility, and was removed to the nearest hotel, where he received skilful medical aid.

He soon revived from his stupor, and exclaimed, rapidly— My mother, father, and sister, where are they! Oh! tell me, tell me, if they are safe. They are all safe, said the doctor, trying to compose him.

I wish to go home as soon as possible doctor, said Charles. I feel well enough now, thank Heaven. Oblige me, Dr. Wilson, by ordering a sleigh. I want you to accompany me. Will you not?

With your permission, sir, responded the doctor.

CHAPTER II.

When Charles Edmonds was thrown from the sleigh, the horses dashed madly on up Broadway, much to the surprise and danger of the lives and limbs of the numerous pedestrians, which might have been seen at all hours of the evening, in this popular thoroughfare. Men and women stood aghast as the fiery steeds dashed by, with the horrified Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds in each other's arms, and the beautiful, but now frightened Elizabeth standing in the sleigh, holding her finely chiseled arms, round her father's neck.

Several attempts were made to stop the wild, ungovernable beasts, by not only the policemen, but many of the pedestrians; but it was all to no purpose.

On, on they ran with all their might, and there was no one found who would risk his life until the horses reached Madison Square, when a young man was about crossing to the opposite side of the street, to his horror, observed the perilous situation of the group as they were huddled together in the sleigh. He stopped suddenly, and being of a brave, reckless and impulsive nature, he was resolved at once to save the precious lives of those who were then entering the dark portals of death, at the risk of his own.

It was but the work of a moment. The young hero stood like a statue in the direction he thought the foaming horses would come.

For God's sake! exclaimed a bystander, leave the way. Run this way; quick, make haste, or else you will be dashed to pieces instantly.

My God! my God! replied many persons, see, he does not move.

There, he's killed. Oh the poor fellow!

Instantly the horses plunged upon him, but he, seizing the loose and broken reins firmly in his grasp, checked their speed, and quick as thought both horses and sleigh were upset, by that noble and daring act. Fortunately for Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds and Elizabeth, they were more frightened than hurt. Mr. Edmonds was stunned, and received a deep gash on the back part of his head. On recovering his joy knew no bounds, on beholding his wife by his side apparently unhurt.

My dear, he exclaimed, are you much hurt? Oh, those infernal horses; I'll shoot them instantly! But Elizabeth! Where is she? Is she dead? I cannot see her. Ah! I see that crowd there; they are looking at her—I fear she is dead.

Mr. Edmonds spoke, looked and acted like a man insane; nor can we wonder at it under the circumstances.

Be calm, my dear, said the wife tremulously. We are not very seriously hurt, but I fear Charles is dead; and she sobbed aloud before the motley throng which had been collected.

As I live, exclaimed Mr. E. to his wife, here comes our beloved daughter, in company with Miss Simson and her brother Edward; the next moment she was firmly locked in her loved father's arms.

Are any of your limbs broken, my daughter, or are you much hurt? he asked.

No, father, thanks to Divine Providence, my limbs are not broken, nor am I even hurt, but I was horribly frightened. But where is mother? Is she alive? tell me.

Oh poor, dear Charles, too, where is he? Oh, I'm sure he must be dead by this time! I have received but this gash on my arm, dear, responded her mother, but, I cannot give you any information as regards Charles.

My dear boy, I fear he is dead by this time.

Mr. Edmonds procured a hired carriage immediately and told Mrs. E., Elizabeth, Julia Simson and Edward, to get in and drive home, as soon as possible, while he looked after the horses and sleigh, and that he would be home presently.

Elizabeth spoke not a word from the time she entered the carriage until she left it, and her mother and Julia Simson came to the conclusion that she was but internally, and wished to conceal it from her and her father.

This is your house ma'am, isn't it? asked the driver who went by the name of Nigger Mike, because his complexion was very dark and his hair short, black and curly.

Yes, that is the house, replied Mrs. Edmonds, as she put her head out of the carriage window, and pointed to her residence.

The driver rang the bell and a tall, stout son of the Emerald Isle, made his appearance at the door.

Och, Mike, is this yerself, he said addressing the driver. Who's in the carriage? Come out here, and you'll soon find out, I will be bail, answered Nigger Mike.

My young Misher Charles is very sick, replied Dennis, who was an old and faithful servant in the family of Mr. Edmonds.

Tell me, continued Dennis is Mr. Edmonds, his wife and daughter, kilt intirely? Och, sure, its meself that's sarry 'nough for the terrible accident this evenin'. Bad luck to those divils av crame-colored, blagard horses.

Och, stop yer preaching, interrupted the driver, and come here and tend to yer business.

Dennis ran out at once, and helped Miss Elizabeth up the high marble steps, for which she very kindly thanked him.

Och, mistress, exclaimed the warm-hearted Dennis, sure it's glad I am to see you and your daughter alive once more.

Thank you, Dennis, replied Mrs. Edmonds. Call Mary and tell her to show my daughter to her chamber. Quick, now; hurry Dennis.

Yis ma'am, said Dennis, who looked really confused and sorrowful, as he left the drawing-room where the company were seated.

But I forgot to ax ye ma'am, said Dennis returning to the drawing room, where is massa? Is he kilt, or is he alive?

Your master received a slight cut on the back of his head, but he considers it very trifling and so he procured a carriage for us, and went to look after his favorite horses and sleigh, and will be here in a few minutes, I expect.

Thank God and the blessed Virgin for that, ma'am, exclaimed the good pious Dennis, as he cast his large black eyes heavenward; but why don't Miss 'Lizbeth speak ma'am? he continued. Och, but she looks as white as an angel in the face.

No, Dennis, replied Miss Simson, who stood beside Elizabeth, who was opposite a large mirror, no Dennis, she is not hurt, but frightened.

Be dad ma'am, but's meself that's glad to hear that same good news, responded the servant as he cast a look of heartfelt thanks at his good, kind friend.

Why Dennis, asked the mistress rather impatiently, what delays Mary? I thought I told you sometime ago to tell her I wanted her to show my daughter to her chamber.

Please to forgive me ma'am, replied Dennis, I forgot all about it; but I'll run like a rabbit now, ma'am, and tell her to come and see you immediately.

Mary was Elizabeth's maid since she was twelve years old, and she looked upon her more like a dear confiding friend, than a servant.

Oh, I was so sorry, said Mary, when I heard that you were all thrown out of the sleigh; but I am glad, indeed, that your father and mother, Mr. Charles and yourself have been so fortunate as to escape with such slight injuries.

Thank you, Mary, replied Elizabeth. But where is your father, continued the servant in a tone of meek and gentle modesty.

I cannot very well tell, for I have been much bewildered since the accident. The last I remember of him, is, he asked me to get into the carriage, and then I knew no more until within the last few minutes, when I awoke to consciousness; but I trust and hope, that he is safe and— Hark! Mary! The door bell rings, and I want you to go and see who is at the door. If it is any person who enquires for me, tell them I've retired for the night—remember.

Yes, Miss, replied the servant as she ran down stairs to see who was at the door.

Ah! Mary, good evening, exclaimed Mr. Edmonds, extending his hand to his servant, (a thing which he never had done before.) Tell me, Mary, if my wife, my daughter, and my son are in their rooms.

Yes, sir, they have all retired, and are out of danger, thank God, was Mary's reply.

Och! you know not how thankful I am to my God, for thus preserving our lives to-night. Your mistress, Charles, and myself have received slight wounds, but that's nothing—nothing Mary; and he continued, tell Dennis I want to see him.

Yes sir, I'll send him as soon as possible—good night, Mary.

Good night, Mary, replied Mr. Edmonds, and he then threw himself upon the green velvet-covered sofa, to await the entrance of his much esteemed, old servant Dennis.

Dennis! Dennis! I say! roared Mary at the top of her voice, as she entered the servant's sitting room, where Dennis was taking a little nap.

Och! Mary, you know I love you, said Dennis, who was really dreaming aloud.

Dennis! wake up; the master wants to see you. Quick, or he'll be mad with you—quick I say. Do you hear.

What—who—where am I? exclaimed the servant, waking up.

Who wants me? he asked, and then he commenced rubbing his eyes.

Why, your master wants to see you, and he will give you a real scolding for being so dilatory in your business.

What! Is that you, Mary? enquired Dennis, as he sprang from the old-fashioned arm chair that stood in the corner. I was just dreaming 'bout ye.

A fig for your dreams, said Mary. Well, let's have one kiss, said the old servant, taking hold of Mary's hand, and drawing her towards him.

I'll scream if you kiss me, Mary replied archly.

Well then for experiment's sake, I'll try it, said Dennis, and he pressed Mary to his heart, and also pressed a few warm kisses on her ruby lips.

See what you have done, Dennis, unloosed all my hair and broke my breast-pin, said Mary, languishingly.

Well, if it comes to that, see what you have done, replied Dennis. Look at my poor shirt and collar; they look as though they hadn't been washed for a month of Sundays. Och! ye wicked sinner ye.

Dennis! Dennis! exclaimed Mr. Edmonds who was sitting in the parlor, anxiously waiting for him to enter, so that he could ascertain some intelligence about his son, Mr. Charles, as Dennis used to call him.

Why Dennis what in the world kept you so long, asked Dennis' master as he stood before him with down cast eyes and sorrowful countenance.

Well, to tell you the plain honest truth sir, I was sound asleep as a board nail, replied Dennis.

Well, I'll forgive you this time, kindly remarked Mr. Edmonds, looking up cheerfully at Dennis, as he stood with one hand in his pantaloons pocket, and the other was carelessly hanging by his side.

Dennis, continued Mr. E., how is Mr. Charles? Is he much hurt?

Be dad, sur, he's as smart as a cricket and as well as can be expected. Och, sur, sure, God was good to ye all to preserve yer lives.

You are right, Dennis, we should be very thankful to Divine Providence for all he has done for us to-night. So you say that Charles is not much hurt.

He's now in bed sur, shavin' as comfortable as a bird in his nest, an' in the morning, sur, he'll wake up as light as the sun in the heavens.

Indeed, I am glad to hear that, Dennis, but I want to know if the horses are in the stable? I heard that John drove them home? Is it true?

Yes, sur, he was out a walking for a little while, and he happened to be up near Madison Square, when the accident occurred, and so, the first thing he done, was to enquire for the family, but he heard that you all rode home in a carriage, sur. He then saw a great crowd around the horses, an' he towld the constables, sur, that he was your coachman, and then they gave him up your "Crimes;" but the sleigh is broke into smithereens, and one of "Billey's" hind legs is badly cut, sur, replied Dennis.

Well, I am glad it's no worse, Dennis, so now you can tell John to take care of the horses, and I will reward him for his trouble by and by.

Be dad, I'll tell him that same, sur, and if any person can do it, it's himself that can. He was counted the very best horse doctor in all Tipperary, sur.

Well, tell him to take good care of the horses, and to be sure and pay particular attention to "Billey's" sore leg; don't forget, Dennis.

No, sur, I won't forget it, an' for fear I'd forgot, I'll go out to the stable and see John, an' tell all about it, sur, immediately.

That's right, Dennis, and after you tell John what I've just told you, you can retire to bed.

Yes, sur—but won't you have supper, sur? I've everything nice and warm for ye, sur.

Not to-night, Dennis; not to-night. TO BE CONTINUED.

Force of Example.

A boy once went to a ragged school, and had his face washed; and when he went home, his neighbors looked at him with astonishment. They said, "that looks like Tom Rogers, and yet it can't be for he's so clear." Presently his mother looked at him; finding his face so clean, she fancied her face dirty and washed it. The father soon came home, and seeing his wife so clean thought his face dirty and soon followed their example. Father, mother and son all being clean, the mother began to think the room looked dirty, and down she went on her knees, and scrubbed that clean. There was a female lodger in the house, who, seeing such a change in her neighbors, thought her face and room very dirty, and she speedily betook to the cleansing operation likewise. And very soon the whole house was, as it were, transformed and made tidy and comfortable, simply by the cleaning of one ragged school-boy.

Delirium Tremens.

Of all the vices which meet their punishment on this side of the grave, there is none to which is attached so sure a retribution as to drunkenness. Decay of health and fortune are its first fruits; and if the wretched devotee be permitted to pass the summer time of life, premature decrepitude of body, and imbecility of mind, are its autumn gatherings. There is yet another fate that may await him—death, impatient of his prey, may claim his victim in his mad career. If he do so, the instrument with which he commonly strikes the fatal blow is delirium tremens. Though not invariably the result of over-indulgence in spirituous drinks, it is so in so large a majority of instances, as to have obtained for it the popular name of the "drunkard's disease." A more awful malady can hardly be conceived. Its most striking symptoms, as its name implies, are delirium and trembling. The latter shows itself chiefly in the hands; the patient being unable to hold anything steadily. To give a description of the deliriums would be to depict all the horrors which the human mind, robbed of its reasoning powers, is capable of enduring. "Objects of the most appalling descriptions sometimes present themselves to the patient's imagination; he will be possessed with the idea that he is persecuted by evil spirits, who are on the point of carrying him away, or are preparing to destroy him; or he may fancy he is surrounded by assassins; and cases are recorded where the unfortunate sufferers actually expired while exerting themselves to the utmost to ward off the violence they supposed was intended them. Sometimes the most whimsical notions arise; thus a patient will imagine that rats or mice, or other troublesome vermin, are running over him, or near him; that he is employed in drawing ribbons from the ends of his fingers, with numberless extravagancies of a similar nature." This is a picture of the disease in a severe form; but it presents itself in every shape of violence, from the slight indisposition, mental depression and waterfalls, which marks its first stage, up to that point which terminates in raving madness and death.—Yeldham.

Purchasing Provisions.

Groceries, candles, soap, and many other things, are more advantageously purchased in large quantities, and from wholesale dealers, than by buying them at retail shops, and only for immediate consumption. Candles improve by keeping for a few months, and may be kept even two years without injury, although that cannot be said to improve them. Those which are made in cool weather are the best; and some people are careful not to buy in a store of candles at the time of the year in which they suppose lamp fat to be mixed with the tallow, which they fancy makes the candles soft and inclined to run.

Soap, which is also improved by keeping, should be purchased in large quantities, and cut while it is soft into small pieces, each of which should not exceed half a pound in weight. It should be kept in a dry and moderately warm place;

a good thing you resolved to marry, and refused to be a solitary, beer-drinking, pipe-smoking bachelor, if you succeeded as well in your efforts as he who, once a young man like you, is now simply old, contented and comfortable.—Life Illustrated.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, April 10th, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

A GOOD SHOT. A flock of wild geese, from the sunny South, to their summer residence in the North, passed over this town on Tuesday last. Their course was very low and when in the range of Mr. O. M. Pope's residence, they were marked by that gentleman, and one of their number, a fine fat fellow, was pierced through the body by a rifle ball. It was a fine shot, as has been remarked by a number who saw it. Other sportsmen tried their luck at the fleeing birds, and before the wounded one fell, which has led to a misunderstanding to whom the prize belongs; but we have been assured by eye witnesses, that to Mr. Pope the credit is due; that there is no mistake—shot number one done the deed.

QUINCY BRASS BAND CONCERT. We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement for a "Promenade Concert" to be given by the "Quincy Brass Band." There has been many attempts among the musical portion of our community in years past, to establish a band of musicians in this town and with some success; but they have not met with that encouragement to which their efforts entitled them. In the case of this Band, however, whose Concert is advertised for the evening of Fast day, we take pleasure in assuring our readers that they have triumphed over all the difficulties of a young organization, and are excelled by few, if any, Bands in the Commonwealth. Their labor, perseverance and talents entitle them to the high consideration and thanks of the public, and we trust that the entertainment which they offer to our citizens, will be fully availed of, and that the Town Hall will be filled not only with the music, but with the manliness and beauty of Quincy.

COAL AT $6.50 PER TON. See Mr. Brackett's advertisement in another column. The promptness with which Mr. B. has met the exigencies of the times, in the reduction of the price of so important an article of domestic use, must, we are sure, be duly appreciated by the community. His stock of coal is large, of excellent quality, purchased on the most favorable terms, with ample facilities for fresh supplies, enables him to sell at above named discount, and delivered free of charge, at any part of the town. The law of trade is, sustain those who sustain you. With such men to direct our trade, we might soon expect to see prices brought down to a living standard. "Live and let live," should be our motto.

THE INFUSORIAL POLISH. We have seen a number of testimonials from highly respectable sources, all speaking in high terms of the merits of this article, which we shall take the liberty at an early day to publish. In the mean time, we would recommend to those of our readers, who are not already in possession of this invaluable ingredient, to obtain it at once, they will find it a most serviceable agent in purifying all metallic and glass substances, by a very simple and easy process.

A NEW RESTORATOR. Mr. Page and Son have leased the room formerly occupied by the Old Colony Railroad as a Depot, over which the gentlemanly agent, Mr. Gay, has so long and satisfactorily presided. They have tastefully fitted it up for that purpose, where will be kept all the et ceteras usually found in such establishments, for the accommodation of the travelling community. We shall at another time, refer again to this establishment; pending which, we would recommend the Messrs. Pages, at their new quarters to the favorable notice of our citizens.

CONGRESS. The conciliatory spirit which appears to pervade both Houses of Congress on the Kansas question, is the harbinger, we trust, of a speedy settlement of that vexed and unprofitable subject. Both the belligerent parties have approached very near to each other, the Senate Bill and the Crittenden Amendment, (so called) to the Lecompton Constitution, would either bring about what the administration desires—the speedy rejection of the whole affair from the Halls of Congress, and thrown back to the people of that Territory to be moulded and fashioned according to their own liking. The Senate Bill has the most friends, for it is considered the most effectual remedy to secure such a result. The firmness of the President throughout the whole affair, has encouraged the timid and wavering, and the country now looks to him and the Senate for an early and final adjustment of the difficulty.

LECTURE. Mr. Grimes at Johnson's Hall, this evening.

Now or NEVER. It is seldom that an entertainment of so much interest, and of so great a combination of attractions visits us, as the exhibitions of Dr. Kane's Arctic Voyages, which will be on exhibition at Town Hall, next week. This rare entertainment will remain with us during a part of the week, and we would advise our citizens to avail themselves of this opportunity of witnessing these paintings, portraying the perils and sufferings endured by Dr. Kane and his brave companions, while exploring the Polar regions.

Also, to see the wonderful Automaton Ravel Family, introduced by Sig. Morillo, and Prof. Carl, in his astonishing feats of Balancing, Magic and Strength, in which he challenges the world. This is an entertainment of more than ordinary interest and should receive liberal support of our townsmen, for the subject is one that ought to interest us all.

FAST DAY. Before another issue of our paper, this day, consecrated by the wisdom of the Governor and his Council, for religious and devotional exercises, will have passed, leaving, we hope a salutary influence upon the community. Our ancestors, made it, literally, a day of fasting and humiliation. All carnal desires were strictly forbidden, no matter how urgent their promptings might be. The mortification of the body, for its spiritual improvement, was continued from the rising of the sun until the going down of the same. Modern reformers have discarded this ancient custom—it is now more a day of feasting and mirth, than of abstinence and prayer. His Excellency, however, in his proclamation, strongly urges its observance by a general attendance at the different places of worship. He says, after a careful observation of the religious, but more especially the political horizon, he is of opinion that there is much cause for self-abasement and deep and earnest prayer. With us, many of the wishes of the Governor will be carried out, but a new feature will be added on this occasion not mentioned in the Executive programme. Our Fire Department on the morning of that day will turn out for a friendly trial of skill under the direction of the Board of Engineers. As our Department ranks second to none in the State, our citizens may expect to see some smart playing.

THE QUINCY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY held their Annual Meeting at their office on Wednesday, the 7th instant, and the following named gentlemen were chosen Directors for the year ensuing:

A NEW ARTICLE OF

Unrivalled Excellence

FOR polishing or polishing all finished Metallic or Glass substances. The superiority of this article, over all others for the purpose named above, has been freely accorded to it by those who have given it a trial. Its rare virtues and peculiar properties, are singular. It not only removes all dirt or impurities from the object, but restores to it a beautiful smooth surface and lustre, equal in brilliancy to the new. For Jewelry of Every Description.

Silver and Glass Ware, Mirrors especially, and particularly

it is most admirably adapted.

It needs only to be used once, and no family would be without it.

The ingredients from which the Powder is compounded, is the product of an insect—the labor of ages—and is one of the many useful purposes to which it has been applied by the ingenuity of man. It is a white and delicate substance, free from everything offensive, and is dissolved or absorbed by the water, leaving no impurities, but a bright and mirror-like surface.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

Lines to L.

We nestled in a rock-piled nook—I saw
Beneath our feet the sea blown flat; and read
The law
Of swift decay, on the brown crumbling isles.
Among the headland rose the snow-white piles,
That dream by day, but kindling with the night
Flash far into the cleft their crimson light.
And yet, from that enchanted height, I turned
To drink my fill of these. Within these years
The fire-eyed Angel of young hope unspent;
Sea, sky and air were but a setting lent
To thee, the central gem. Grave, gentle girl!
My deep soul's friend! New found! In vain
You furl
Round your wild heart the curtaining veil of calm—
I see the inner flame. I hear the fiery psalm.
FRANK.
Squantum, Sept. 11th, 1857.

Building Upon the Sand.

'Tis well to woo, 'tis well to wed,
For so the world has done
Since myrtle grew, and roses blew,
And morning brought the sun.
But have care, ye young and fair,
Be sure ye pledge with truth;
Be certain that your love will wear
Beyond the days of youth.
For if ye give not heart for heart,
As well as hand for hand,
You'll find you've played the unwise part,
And "built upon the sand."

'Tis well to save, 'tis well to have
A goodly store of gold,
And hold enough of the shining stuff,
For charity is cold.
But place not all your hopes and trust
In what the deep mine brings;
We cannot live on yellow dust
Unmixed with purer things.

And he who piles up wealth alone,
Will often have to stand
Beside his coffer-chest, and own
'Tis "built upon the sand."

'Tis good to speak in kindly guise,
And soothe white'er we can;
For speech should bind the human mind,
And love link man to man.

But stay not at the gentle words,
Let deeds with language dwell;
The one who piles up words alone,
Should scatter crumbs as well.
The mercy that is warm and true,
Must lend a helping hand,
For those who talk, yet fail to do,
But "build upon sand."

Procrastinations.

If Fortune with a smiling face
Strew roses in our way,
When shall we stoop to pick them up?
To-day, my love, to-day.
But should she frown with face of care,
And talk of coming sorrow,
When shall we grieve, if grieve we must?
To-morrow, love, to-morrow.
If those who've wronged us own their faults
And kindly pity pray,
When shall we listen and forgive?
To-day, my love, to-day.
But if stern Justice urge rebuke,
And warn us from Memory borrow,
When shall we chide, if chide we dare?
To-morrow, love, to-morrow.
If those to whom we owe a debt
Are harmed unless we pay,
When shall we struggle to be just?
To-day, my love, to-day.
But if our debtor fail our hope,
And plead his ruin through,
When shall we weigh his breach of faith?
To-morrow, love, to-morrow.
If Love, estranged, should once again
Her genial smile display,
When shall we kiss her proffered lips?
To-day, my love, to-day.
But if she would indulge regret,
Or dwell with by-gone sorrow,
When shall we weep—weep we must?
To-morrow, love, to-morrow.
For virtuous acts and harmless joys
The minutes will not stay;
We've always time to welcome them,
To-day, my love, to-day.
But care, resentment, angry words,
And unavailing sorrow,
Come far too soon if they appear
To-morrow, love, to-morrow.

Anecdotes.

John, can you tell me the difference Between the attraction of gravitation and the attraction of cohesion?
Yes, sir, I think I can. Why, you see,
sir, attraction of gravitation pulls a drunken man to the ground, and the attraction of cohesion prevents his getting up again.

An Irishman who was traveling on his way to Manchester, arrived at the fork of a road
where there stood a sign board, which read Manchester four miles.
"Man chased her four miles!" cried Terence,
be Shaint Patrick, I could have caught
her myself in half the time.

Mother, said a little boy, I've got such a bad headache and sore throat too.
Have you, my dear? asked the mother;
well you shall have some medicine.
It's no matter, retorted the urchin, I've got them, but they don't hurt me.

Spell cat, said a little girl five years old
to a small one of only three.
I can't, was the reply.
Well, then, if you can't spell cat, spell
kitten.

I have gone into the silk business, said a man to his neighbor.

COMPLETE Dental Establishment, DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG, SURGEON DENTISTS, 25 Tremont Street, (up stairs,) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benevolent agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparative little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patients and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The restoration of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if at all afterwards kept suitably clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by decay.

By the use of the new preparation of Crysta Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay, and partially saved, but veritably restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulverulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

THE RUINED MERCHANT, —OR— A Wife's Extravagance.

BY T. A. CONLEY, OF EAST CAMBRIDGE.

CHAPTER IV.

The morning dawned bright and beautiful, and New York looked charming to the eyes of its immense inhabitants, for it was thickly covered with a stainless mantle of white and gleaming snow, which had fallen during the night. The sun rose majestically in the heavens, and threw its sparkling rays in thick profusion all around, gladdening the hearts of the poor and distressed, as well as the rich, proud and opulent of that famous city.

The merry sleigh-bells sent forth once more their cheerful and lively music.

Oh! how provoking it is, said Mrs. Edmonds, to be disturbed and annoyed by those miserable sleigh-bells; they are all the time rattling in my ears—day and night. I do declare, it is really provoking to think of it.

She hastened to the window and parted the superb and richly embroidered curtains, and looked through one of the large, imported window panes, to see whether the morning was fair or cloudy.

Oh! a delightful morning, truly, exclaimed Mrs. Edmonds, who was really much pleased in mind by the smiling face of day.

Oh! it will be a delightful evening for my leave, and my invited guests will not have to apologize about the inclemency of the weather—that's one comfort I anticipate. I hope we won't have to postpone it again.

At this moment, Mary knocked at Mrs. Edmonds' chamber door, and told her that breakfast was ready.

Very well, I will be down in a few minutes.

Again was the whole family of Mr. Edmonds seated at the breakfast table, but the subject now was not about the accident, but about the levee which was to take place that evening.

Is everything ready? inquired Mrs. Edmonds of Dennis, as she sipped her strong coffee, with an air of nonchalance.

Yes, ma'am, everything is in order for the night, and I've been drilling the servants for some time; so, they'll be perfect in their business, ma'am, was Dennis' reply.

That's right, Dennis, I'll not forget you if things pass off as agreeable as I expect. I'll reward you well for it.

The best of milliners and mantua-makers were consulted, for at least one month previous to this grand levee! and Mrs. Edmonds spent hundreds of dollars upon little superfluities, notwithstanding her husband's aversions to such things.

She gave strict orders to Elizabeth, how she should dress; and told her to be as gay and as lively as possible to all the guests, but particularly so to the Simson family.

I will try and be as agreeable as possible, responded Elizabeth, in a subdued tone.

Is your jewelry in perfect order, Elizabeth, asked the mother.

Yes, mother, everything is in perfect order, just as you willed it.

Now, do I beg of you, throw off this sad melancholy, into which you have fallen for the last few days, for you will, I hope, be the reigning belle this evening.

These words fell on the ear of the daughter, quite different from what the mother expected, for her heart was ill at ease.

I've had your piano tuned to day, by Mr. Zestime, and it is now in very fine order. You must have your best music near at hand, so that there will be no confusion or disarrangement whatever.

Mrs. Edmonds said no more to her obedient daughter; and, wishing to see to other matters of importance, she left the parlor to the great joy of the sad, but lovely Elizabeth.

So I am to wear such and such things, and must have my best music prepared, and "throw off this sad melancholy, into which I have fallen for the last few days," (as my mother says.) Well, be it so; for her sake, I will do it, or at least, appear to do it. Ah! she knows not the deep secrets of this poor troubled heart of mine!

Why not? say you.

Because, there is no sympathizing cord in hers that would respond to mine; and therefore it would be useless for me to divulge to her the heavy burden which lays so heavily upon my aching heart. True, she is my mother! She it was that gave me life,—being; and yet, how is it that we thus differ in mind, in heart, and in soul! It is a mystery that I cannot solve; therefore, I'll leave it to Him who has created, and sees all things, both in Heaven and on earth. Her whole mind is consecrated upon the things of earth; and she has often told me that the reason she goes to Dr. Percy's church is, because it is fashionable; and she likes to hear him deliver one of his eloquent sermons; and that he was a real lord Chesterfield, so perfect were his manners and rules of etiquette. Thus soliloquized Miss Elizabeth after her mother had left her.

At seven o'clock P.M., the beautiful mansion of Mr. Edmonds, was illuminated from top to bottom, which presented to the eye of the passer, a most magnificent appearance. No oriental palace could exceed the drawing-rooms in taste, beauty and splendor. The richest of Brussels carpet, covered the spacious floors. Mirrors of the finest kind adorned the velvet covered walls. Paintings from the pencils of the best European and American artists, were tastefully hung where the eye of the critic could observe every shade and color. Statuary, also, in their lifelike forms, stood here and there, to enrapture the eye of the refined and artistic. Rich damask curtains with golden fastenings adorned the windows. The superb and richly covered sofas, lounges, chairs, ottomans, &c., were imported expressly from Paris, by Mrs. Edmonds. In fact, she spared neither time nor money to have her drawing-rooms superior, and more magnificent, than any of her rich and proud competitors of Fifth Avenue.

Pen cannot describe, nor tongue express the rich scene which met the eye of the beholder as he or she entered those richly furnished rooms that evening.

Carriage after carriage, and sleigh after sleigh drove to Mr. Edmonds' mansion, and as soon as they had discharged their precious contents drove home again, to appear at a stated hour the next morning.

Governors, senators, judges, editors, divines, lawyers, merchants, brokers, and, in fact, the elite and fashionable of New York were present on the occasion. Sweet music lent its charms to the hour, and bird-like voices enraptured the gay and giddy throng. A delicious supper for two hundred guests were prepared, consisting of all one could name in the shape of edibles. Wines and liquors of the finest and oldest brand were profusely set upon the sideboard, and servants were stationed at every call. All the sciences—art, love, war, and many other subjects, too numerous to mention, were discussed upon that occasion.

It was, indeed, a most gorgeous sight, to look at the ladies and gentlemen who were assembled there that night; for each and every one tried hard to excel the other in manners, dress and etiquette.

It was, conceded that Miss Elizabeth Edmonds was the belle, and the real prima donna of the evening; but she, like a true and really wise young lady, believed not too trusted in the cunning flatterers of the rich, proud and aristocratic nabobs of the famous American Metropolis.

She knew that she was handsome (and what pretty girl does not); yet her common sense was so great, that her beauty did not puff her up, in her own estimation, to absurdity and vain coquetry.

Her tall and finely proportioned figure; eyes as blue as an Italian sky; her hair glistening like gold in the sunbeams; teeth as white and as fine as ivory; a finely formed Grecian nose; a chin denoting firmness, and lips as red as a rose—in fact, Miss Edmonds was the very model of beauty and loveliness.

It was no wonder that Edward Simson was enamored with her, and paid her such marked attention on that evening; but he noticed the same quiet and thoughtful manner of Miss Edmonds as formerly, which surprised him not a little.

She conversed with all the guests alike, and astonished grave old men and flirting young ladies, by her wise and pleasing manners.

But, what a contrast was there between her and Miss Julia Simson! It is true that Julia had many personal attractions, which she endeavored to show to the best advantage, especially before Charles Edmonds; yet she was giddy and really vain, in everything she did. She tried to be witty, but alas! failed in the attempt. She tried to converse with those around her, but she flew so quick from subject to subject, that she actually made herself ridiculous.

She imagined she was conversant with all subjects, and found out to her mortification that she knew comparatively nothing, when in the presence of superior minds. Of course she spent years at the best boarding schools, and her parents flattered themselves that she knew everything, and thought her perfection's self, in beauty and education.

Mr. and Mrs. Simson were very illiterate people, comparatively speaking, but their great wealth covered their ignorance and absurd folly. Money they say, makes the mare go; and money also made the Simson family go far beyond their bounds. But here I will let them rest for the present.

The clock struck the hour of two, and the gay assemblage commenced departing for their homes, much to the joy of Elizabeth Edmonds, who longed and sought for retirement in her own room.

At three o'clock in the morning, Mr. Edmonds' mansion was again silent as the tomb, for now the whole family, including the tired and weary servants, were wrapped in the arms of morpheus.

When the family sat down to a late breakfast the same morning, their chief topic was about the ladies and gentlemen who were at their grand soiree. Each and every one of the prominent personages, came in for their share of Mrs. Edmonds' criticism, and were much praised or censured by her as she thought they deserved.

Whilst Mr. Edmonds was sipping thoughtfully his coffee, his wife asked him rather pertly, why he looked so sad and melancholy.

I am thinking about some business affairs, my dear, he replied.

Oh! do not, for gracious sake, said the merchant's wife in an angry tone, be all the time thinking about your business affairs. It is really vexatious to hear you day and night, talk about such things.

Charles nor Elizabeth said not a word, but looked with filial love at their good and indulgent father; and if their looks of sympathy could have been observed by him, he would, no doubt, have felt more happy in mind, and been relieved very much of the heavy business burthen, that laid like a millstone on his heart. But he was too much absorbed in deep thought to notice anything but that which concerned his business.

Mr. Edmonds arose from the table, slipped on his overcoat, took his hat and cane in his hand, and told Dennis he would be back to dinner at five o'clock.

He stepped into the sleigh that was waiting for him at the door, and John drove his master to his large and extensive store on D—street.

John, said Mr. Edmonds, be sure and call at four o'clock. Don't forget.

All right, sir, replied John, and off he went.

Please ma'am to give me some cold victuals, said a little girl with large black eyes, as she stood shivering and shaking with the cold on the marble steps of the merchant's mansion. She looked most imploringly at Mrs. Edmonds, who sat in her richly stuffed rocking chair at the parlor window; but the cold and disdainful manner of Mrs. Edmonds, as she looked at the poor child of misfortune who stood before her, cold, half-clad and hungry, caused the poor little sufferer, to recoil with fear; and she turned her back towards the parlor window, and gave vent to her grief in tears and heavy sighs.

Dennis, said his mistress in a tone of anger, tell the dirty little beggar girl to go away from there. It is really too bad that they will not give me one moment's rest.—Tell her to leave instantly.

Yes, ma'am, replied Dennis, who knew well that he was bound to obey her orders.

Oh, mother! do not turn the poor creature away from the door without giving her something to eat, hastily remark the good Miss Elizabeth, who was listening to all her mother had to say about the beggar. We have a basket full of cold victuals in the larder that will go to waste. Do, pray, mother, let me go and fill her little basket. Shall I, mother?

Silence! exclaimed the merchant's wife, in a tone of tragic earnestness. I believe I know what to do without your advice. Go, Dennis, and do as I told you.

The servant obeyed his orders, and Elizabeth left the parlor and went to her room to ponder on the words of her mother. She went to her chamber window to see which way the child was going, but to her surprise she was standing in the same place, meditating, no doubt, upon the servant's words.

Miss Edmonds looked with the eye of pity and compassion upon the poor, little wanderer, and gently raising the chamber window, which attracted the little beggar's attention, she threw a bright half-dollar to her, and sent her on her way rejoicing.

The poor child looked up to her, and said in accents sweet and low,—Thank you Miss, God will reward you; and off she went as merry, and as light hearted, as though she never knew what it was to be the child of poverty.

Verily, it is more blessed to give than to receive, soliloquized the noble hearted and pure minded Miss Edmonds, as she stood thoughtfully at the window; and, she continued, I am sorry that mother acts so, towards God's poor, down-trodden children.—On last Sabbath evening, she put her name down for one hundred dollars in Dr. Percy's church, for the Foreign Missions Aid Society, and now she has refused some cold victuals to that poor little girl that just left her door. Alas! for such charity as that.

Ah, thou gentle one, thou reasonest well, truly. Your mother did subscribe one hundred dollars for the promotion of the Foreign Missions Aid Society, while seated in her comfortable pew in Dr. Percy's church, because she was well aware that all the members would know it in a very little while, and furthermore, that her name would be inserted in the New York papers the next morning.

Indeed, Mrs. Edmonds was one of the most prominent members of Dr. Percy's church whenever money was to be raised, either for the adornment of the church, or for Missionary cause. But reader, Mrs. Edmonds is not the only lady of fortune who acts thus.—Alas! there are very many others, who move in the "highest circles" of Christianity, that are really addicted to the same ostentatious worldly display, and love to herald to the world at large, their every, (would be) generous act and deed of charity.

Such people should not be despised by any, but they should receive the pity of every true Christian in the land, for such flagrant wrong, if I may so call it.

Rich people, as a general thing, have many privileges and enjoy innumerable luxuries of which the poor know not of, or can never enjoy here below. But the poor and lonely should not be disheartened, for a happier and a brighter world is in store for them hereafter.

Recklessness of Life.

A carelessness with regard to human life is one of the acknowledged faults of the people of this country. The boiler of a high pressure steamboat explodes, many are killed, and the circumstances is at time viewed with horror. Soon however, it is forgotten, and passengers on the Western rivers, rather than to see rival boats pass them, urge the hands to increase the steam, although they incur a risk of perishing either by fire or water. Indeed, the captain is often obliged to use his authority sternly, for the purpose of restraining the perilous zeal of his excited guests.

Then a monster hotel is burnt at St. Louis, and forty human beings die miserably in the flames, or lose their lives in leaping from the upper windows. And yet people continue to crowd these caravanseries without ascertaining whether escape would be easy in the event of a conflagration. Companies and capitalists too, build new and vast public palaces of the kind, with narrow corridors and stair cases, so that egress could hardly be effected before half the inmates would be suffocated with smoke, or if entire strangers, would lose their way in passages that are more puzzling than the Cretan labyrinth, and thus become incarcerated in a kind of dungeon, to be burnt alive. And here it may not be amiss to remark, that any architect or builder, who would plan extensive edifices so as to favor a sure and speedy egress from a flaming interior, would merit and receive the thanks of the entire community.

However rapidly a railway train may run, yet it seldom goes fast enough to please the traveller, notwithstanding that many have been lost by a collision only a few days before. In addition to the proverbial recklessness in these matters, we may observe that much property has been destroyed by the use of hot-air furnaces—and the conducting of fiery flues between lath and plaster partitions, with no other shield save sheets of tin.

One hint more, and we have done. Theatres, halls for public meetings, concert and lecture rooms should, like the Coliseum and other buildings intended for large assemblies in ancient Rome, be well provided with "vomitories," (wide and numerous doorways,) so that in the event of fire or panic, the room may be cleared in a few minutes. Iron should be employed to the fullest extent possible.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Best Things for Burns.

It may be put down as a settled fact the very best application for all kinds of burns and scalds is an immediate application of dry wheat flour. It is without controversy better than any and all of the healing salves, turpentine, oils, pain killers, &c., that can be named. We speak positively on this point, because it is one decided by the best physicians, and we have had abundant practical proofs of its efficacy.

Heat disorganizes the flesh, deadens the cuticle or outer skin, and admits air, which is irritating. A good coating of flour shuts out the air, soothes the irritation, and dries up the fluids thrown out. Do not imagine that "something healing" must be applied. Not all the salves in the world can mend broken flesh. You can stick together broken glass, or wood, with wax or glue. You can weld together severed iron but no such treatment is applicable to flesh disorganized, cut or burned away. Nature, so to speak has a way of her own, and only one way to repair a breach in the flesh. The healing material comes from within. If the hand be cut, bring the several parts together, hold them there steadily, cover up the part from the air from external injury, and the healing will go on so long as there is no disturbance. If from curiosity, or anxiety or other cause, you disturb the half formed flesh, a sore will be the consequence.

We repeat, for all kinds of burns and scalds, however severe, put on only a thick coat of flour. If a hard crusty mass be formed so as to produce irritation, after a day or two wash off the surface carefully with blood-warm water, dry partially, and put on more flour, but never disturb the actual surface of the sore until, when entirely healed, the scab falls off of its own accord. Our word for it, this treatment will best promote the cure of burns.

But a short time since, a child upset a dish of boiling water into its bosom, producing a fearful scald upon the whole front of its body. The mother chanced to be a reader of the Patriot, and noted our remarks on this topic some two years ago. She immediately applied flour, and flour only, binding it on with a cloth loosely so as not to produce irritation. The child was soon soothed, and in a few weeks was entirely healed, with scarcely a scar remaining. This is but one of the many similar instances that have come to our knowledge from time to time.—American Agriculturist.

How Flowers are made.

If you love flowers, you will want to know all you can about them. It is just as it is when you love a person. You want to know all that you can about the friend that you love so well. And if you love flowers, you will like to know what I have to tell you about them.

You go out into the garden, and you see among all the flowers there a large red rose. Look at it, and see how many red leaves it has all folded together. How did that rose come there? That is plain enough, you will say—it grows there. And most grown people as well as children think that this is all that is to be said about it. But what is growing? Do you know how a rose grows? I will tell you something about it.

The rose was once a very little bud. Then it did not look anything like a rose. It was a little green thing with nothing red in it. You would not suppose that it ever would turn into a rose, if you had not seen buds turn into roses before.

The little rose-bud becomes larger and larger every day. Soon it begins to open, and you see the red leaves of the flower all folded together. It spreads out these leaves after a little time, and now you see the full-blown rose. How much larger it is than the little bud from which it came, and how different it is from it! A great many leaves are spread out in its bosom. Some kinds of roses are very large indeed, but their buds at first are very small.

This rose was made. We commonly say that it grew, without thinking what growing is. It was made out of something. There was something that came to the bud to make it into a rose. How did it come there? I will tell you.

The rose was made out of the juice of sap, as we call it. The sap kept coming to the bud all the time that it was growing larger, and then all the time that it was changing into a rose. We do not know how this sap can be made into a beautiful red flower. This we cannot understand. The wisest man in the world cannot tell how it is done. But God, who made all the flowers and everything else, understands it.

But you will ask how the sap comes to the bud. You see that stem that holds the rose. There are little fine pipes in that stem, and the sap comes through these pipes. All the time that the bud is turning into the rose, the sap comes to it through these pipes in them, just as water comes through pipes to our houses. These pipes in the stem are very small, and there are a great many of them. They are so small that you cannot see them, but they are large enough to let the sap run along through them.

If the sap should stop coming through these pipes to the bud, it could not become a rose. If you pick a bud, you know that it stops growing, and never becomes a rose. This is because no more sap can come to it through the pipes of the stem. It is just as no water can come into a house if the water-pipe be cut off outside.

The sap from which the rose is made we should suppose would be like the rose. But it is not. It is not red as you perceive by breaking the stem. It does not taste at all like the leaves of the rose.

It does not seem very wonderful that the little green bud should be made out of the sap in the stem. But it does seem very strange that the bright red leaves of the rose should be made out. Suppose some one should take some stems and bruise them, so as to get the sap out of them. Could he make a rose from this sap? Oh, no. This can be done only in the bud. This is the rose factory. The sap must go there to be made into a rose.

For the Patriot.

The Religious World.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to give an extract from a letter printed in one of the Boston Weeklies, and a few thoughts caused by the ideas therein conveyed.

elements should have upon it and the perfect trust that God will give the increase. Then, with a sober calmness, begin to study nature and her laws, if ye would be brought into close proximity with your Maker. Then, instead of the passionate cry, of "God come down to us," you would be lifted up to him; and instead of dethroning Him to benefit a few, you would begin a work of raising one to Him; and by so doing, the multitude would proclaim the tidings of great joy, that one had risen above the common minds of the great mass, and many would endeavor to search out the way, to open wide the door, that the poor, deluded, of earth's creatures might behold your lamp of light, truth and love, glittering away in the distance—to lighten their path along the Eternal road of wisdom.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, April 24th, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

SERIOUS ACCIDENT. As the sloop Robert, Capt. Derry, of this place, was passing down the river, on her passage to Boston, a heavy block at the mast head, used in loading, became disengaged, falling upon the head of Capt. D., injuring him very seriously. Drs. Woodward and Saville were called, who dressed the wound, and we are happy to learn from his medical attendants, that although the wound is serious, it is not likely to prove fatal. Cap. Derry was a young man of family, one of our most enterprising citizens, with a large circle of friends, who share their sympathies with him in his misfortune.

ANOTHER. As a son of Mr. Jonas Mulligan, who resides at Quincy Neck, was on his way to school, he accidentally fell from a stone wall, dislocating his elbow joint and fracturing his arm. Dr. Newcomb was called, who reduced the dislocation and adjusted the broken bones.

H. A. RANSOM OF SOUTH ABINGTON. We met on Fast Day our enterprising friend, H. A. Ransom, now of South Abington, but recently of this town. Mr. H. is engaged in the grocery business, and to all our enquiries made of acquaintances in that town, but one sentiment governs them in their answer: that he is gentlemanly in his manners, keeps a good and excellent assortment in his line of business—sells very cheap for cash, and is largely respected by a numerous circle of patrons and friends. We are highly gratified at his success as it is worthily bestowed upon a deserving friend.

REMEMBER THE SABBATH DAY AND KEEP IT HOLY. Mr. Ryerson has requested us to state, that on and after this date, his shop, contrary to his usual custom, will be closed on Sabbath mornings. Conscientious reasons, to him of vast moment, he says, has induced him to take this step. He trusts, therefore, that his patrons, to whom on this occasion, he would most respectfully return his sincere thanks for their many acts of kindness, will duly appreciate his motives.

"Six days shalt thou labor, but the seventh is a day of rest;" is a rule which should be kept inviolate—"a ruling to the spirit and letter of the text." The command to labor six days in the week, is as binding and obligatory upon every human creature, as to rest on the seventh. But how many there are who would evade it; the question is, whether those who uniformly break the law six days out of the seven, are more spiritually sound, than those who through force of circumstances violate it but once.

"Maggie; or the Child of Charity." The Fifteenth Chapter of this new story, from the prolific pen of that celebrated author, Francis Smith, Esq., has been laid before the public. It is full of interest—and as a domestic story, must work incalculable good. The characters are well drawn, from scenes in every day life. Mr. Seymour, the future guardian of the orphan, although a man of the world, has a heart ever alive to humanity's call. The filial piety and devotion of Master Charley, the Widow's son, is most feelingly portrayed by the author. Maggie, the heroine of the tale, reminds us of Dickens' little Nell, in Master Humphrey's Clock; gentle and affectionate—her childish simplicity and friendless condition, takes strong hold of our sympathies. We love the picture for its purity and excellence. The buxom Irish widow, with her blunt but genuine honesty, and her eccentric companion, the gastronomic philosopher, are living portraits, the originals of which may be found in almost every community. It is a prize work, publishing in parts, through that popular journal, the New York Weekly. Back numbers, or forth coming issues, may be had of Mr. West, the carrier of the Herald, who is the authorized agent for this place.

THE AUCTION BUSINESS. Mr. Wm. W. Baxter, it will be perceived, has entered the auction business, and respectfully tenders his services to the public for the sale of Real Estate and other property. He has our best wishes.

DANCING. We learn from Prof. Walker, the well known and accomplished teacher of dancing, that his patrons are anxious to have him open a school for juveniles this fall instead of next spring, and he proposes doing so. Mr. Walker is too well known as a gentleman of ability, in his profession, to need any praise from us. His past and present success are sufficient guarantees of his merit.

MISTAKE. The report that the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of this town, lost $5,000 at the fire in Cambridgeport, is untrue.

LIQUOR AGENCY. This is the day set apart for appointing a new agent for this town to furnish our citizens with ardent spirits, according to the provisions set forth in the Maine Liquor Law: as Mr. Wheeler will resign on the first of May. Seventy five applications we learn are before the Selectmen for the office. A sufficient number, we should think, from which a good selection might be made. We have no choice in the matter. We shall cheerfully acquiesce in the result whatever it may be. It may not, however, be amiss here to state, that the wish has been pretty generally expressed, that its future location should be in this part of the town. It is more central—and would be among a population whose mechanical, and especially medicinal wants, it is thought, would far outnumber those of any other. Its present site is considered too far removed; on the outskirts as it were of civilization.

Our Fire Department.

MR. EDITOR: While reading your paper of last week, I noticed in your article on Fast Day, something about the Engine trial which took place on that day. You said then, that you were not able to give the time made by the different Engines, but would give it this week. Now, I understand that at the meeting of Engineers, on Monday evening last, that they could not agree as to the result, and voted to lay the subject upon the table until a trial had taken place, between Niagara No. 1 and Vulture No. 4, so as to let the result of that trial decide the one on Fast Day. Now sir, as there is no prospect of getting the result of the trial from them officially, I will give to you as read from the windows of No. 1's House by the Chief Engineer.

NEW STYLES OF HATS AND CAPS, for gentlemen and ladies wear may be found at Shute's Hat, Cap and Fur Store, 173 and 175 Washington street, Boston. Mr. S. has a rich and valuable assortment of the above named articles, at greatly reduced prices, to which we would call the especial attention of our readers. See advertisement in another column.

SALE OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION. The property offered for sale by Mr. Baxter, the advertisement of which may be found in another column, offers rare inducements to capitalists, or those in want of a neat tenement, centrally and pleasantly located, in a good neighborhood, with land and valuable fruit trees thereon.

RICH AND VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE. Now is your time to close a bargain. The property advertised by Mr. Daniel Baxter at Quincy Point and other places, in another column, is a rare chance for our mechanics and others, by a small investment to secure themselves a homestead. The Point is one of the most thriving portions of our village, and the property here offered is of the first class, on reasonable and advantageous terms.

In the article on the "Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company," published in our last, an error occurred, it should have read, "Quincy Fire and Marine Insurance Co."

Hall's Great

S COPIER REMEDY.

HALL'S Great S Copier Remedy. Preparation is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its composition, requiring neither vomiting nor purging. It is directly upon the primary cause of disease. It regulates the bowels, removes all obstructions,
giving a healthy action to the liver and a free flow to the stomach. It overcomes that lingering action which is often experienced in coughing and sneezing, and restores and refreshes the mind and energy and physical strength.

Thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofulous humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Broomitis, Ash-
les, Eczema, Erysipelas, Rheumatism, Fever, White Swelling, Drops, Boils, Barber's Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which arise themselves in the system or erupt on the skin, it has been used with the most gratifying results, after every other known remedy has been found ineffectual to effect relief.

It is also an effective cure for Liver Complaint, Jaundice, Flatulency, Costiveness and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.
It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and all diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Leucorrhoea and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affection of the Kidneys, Enlargement of the Heart, Rheumatism and Headache.

THE RUINED MERCHANT,

— OR —

A Wife's Extravagance.

BY T. A. CONLEY, OF EAST CAMBRIDGE.

CHAPTER V.

What are you meditating upon, my child, asked Mrs. Edmonds of her daughter, who was standing in rather a sad and pensive
mood at the back chamber window.

I was looking at those wood-sawyers, who are sawing our wood. Just observe how hard they work, and see how the big drops of sweat trickle down their care-worn cheeks,
and I'm sure, it is cold enough to-day to freeze one.

Those children calculated her mother-
with an air of contempt; you're all the time thinking and prating about the poor. Go down stairs Miss and attend to your music
lessons, and let me hear no more of this girlish nonsense from you. Go down, directly,
I say!

I am sure mother, it is no harm to pity the poor and needy, for God commands us to do it, and whatever He commands, we should try and perform; and as for those poor woodsawyers, I am sure they earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Do they not?

Well, those common people are used to hard work—that ends it.

But mother,—
I shall hear no more of your nonsense,
Miss, hastily interrupted her mother, as she left the room, caring but little about the deep wound she caused in the lovely and philanthropic heart of her sympathizing daughter.

Well, I must, I suppose, go and attend to my music lessons, sadly soliloquized Elizabeth; and the big silvery tears hung like dew-drops on her sallow eye-lashes; but,
she continued, music has no charms for me
now, as in days of yore.

Down stairs she went, and in a few moments she was seated before her piano. She touched the ivory keys with her soft and tapered fingers, and performed with skill, beauty and finish, a sad and melancholy air, from the gifted pen of an old Italian composer.

Elizabeth loved music. In fact, it was her greatest, or, one of her greatest passions;
for she was by nature, together with a highly musical education, fitted for that divine
art. Her voice was soft, sweet, powerful and enchanting. But, unlike other finished artists, it had not power to raise her, (in her own estimation.)

Her wide circle of aristocratic lady companions envied her musical talent, as well as her highly intellectual mind, polished manners, and beauty of person.

Dennis, said Elizabeth in a tone of gentle
ness, go out and tell those poor wood-sawyers to come in and have some dinner. They've been working hard all this forenoon, and I am sure they must be hungry now.

Be that, I'll do that same, Miss, replied the good-hearted Dennis, but perhaps your mother wouldn't like it.

O! it is all right, Dennis! I asked my father for leave to have them dine in the ser-vant's dining room, and he laughed heartily
at my request, and concluded by saying—
I am glad you are so considerate.

So, run Dennis, and tell them to come in,
as quick as you please.

Yes, as fast as my feet will carry me, Miss Elizabeth, replied Dennis, who lost no time
in performing the pleasant task imposed upon him by the generous Miss Edmonds.

Come in, boys, and have a little bite of something to ate, said Dennis rather familiarly, as he walked to the wood-sawyers, whom we will call Mike Finegan and Martin Murphy. They knew Dennis very well, for he came from the same village; and when they were boys, they went to the same fairs and markets together, and drank many a jug of punch in each other's company in "good old Ireland."

Why don't ye come in at wanst, said
Dennis, very impatiently. Come on quick,
and be hanged to ye!

Och! stop yer jokin', archly replied Mike.
It's yerself that's full of the ould boy, an' ye were always, since a yard made a frock for
ye. Indade it's meself that knows ye of ould, Dennis.

It's purty hard to catch ould birds with chaff, responded Martin, as he wiped the sweat
with his shirt-sleeve from his forehead.

Bad ces to ye's both, thundered forth Dennis, between a joke and a half-earnest; de ye's suppose I'd be after foolin' ye's? Come in at wanst and stop yer thricks ye dirty ould blaggards.

Be me soul, said Finegan, but Martin and meself war just thinkin' av goin' home to dinner, this very minute.

Yis, an' here's the chap that'll do that same, responded Murphy, as he laid his saw
on the huge pile of wood.

'Pon my soul, I'm not a humbuggin' ye's boys, earnestly responded Dennis who was now really growing sour in temper.

If I'm tellin' ye a lie, ye can call me Davy. Now isn't that enough?

Arrah! de ye suppose, Dennis, cried Finegan, that I'd go in to Mr. Edmonds' house to ate? Faux! I rather starve outright, than do't; so, stop yer nonsense Dennis.

Och! don't speak so quare, Finegan, answered the philosophic Murphy. Faith it's meself that would do anything 'fore I'd starve to death. Come on—let's go in with Dennis and see if he's foolin' us.

Here Dennis lost all patience, and angry-
ly replied,—
Now if ye don't come in, ye may stay till
doon's day if he please.

Well, by me soul, answered Finegan, with a broad grin upon his honest face; rather than go to doon's day, we'll go with ye to the house.

Murphy answered, Well I second that motion, as they say in the political meetings.

Och! stop yer big jaw-breakin' declinatory
words, and come, if yer comin' replied Finegan to his co-laborer, Murphy, who prided himself upon his good humor.

Come ahead, ye d—s, and stop yer blarney, said Dennis, as he proceeded with hurried steps, towards the kitchen door.

Dennis had his hand on the latch of the kitchen door, when Murphy said in a surprised tone,—
Hold on, Dennis!

What's the matter with ye now?

Och! said Murphy, but be gorry my cloths
are not very fashionable to appear at table in.
If ye were only half as good as yer cloths
ye'd be as good as unton, replied Finegan.
Come on man and hold yer tongue.

The men's dinner is cold, said Elizabeth,
and I—

Och, don't trouble yerself Miss, said Murphy, who was really astonished to see the fine young lady, (as he termed her), so very kind and affectionate.

Come, boys, said Dennis, help yerselves,
an' if ye don't, it will be all yer own fault;
here is a plenty av everything and ye can
ate it or let it alone.

Troth, an' indade if we don't do that same,
modestly replied Finegan, it will be our own
blame, I can tell ye, Dennis.

That is right, said Elizabeth, who was evidently much pleased with her rough-looking guests.

Miss Edmonds and Mary left Dennis to attend and wait upon the men, and they returned to a private sitting room, so that their presence would not embarrass the modest wood-sawyers, while eating.

Dennis, are those two Irish girls? asked Finegan, casting a sly look at his friend, who sat opposite.

Irish girls, did ye say? exclaimed Dennis in a tone of surprise. Bad ces to ye; but what put that strange notion into your head?
or is it dreamin' ye are?

Faux, if ye call this dreamin', responded Finegan, as he stuck his fork into a piece of roast beef, it's meself that wishes that I'd kape a dreamin' ev'ry day of my life.

Be me soul, said Murphy, but I am sure of one thing, and that is not two, that Finegan is no fool, and the man that would buy him for one, would be a long time out av his money, and would be sorry for his bargain.

Be me soul ye better believe that, me ould boy, answered Finegan, and if that was the first time ye told truth ye'd be choked.

But, why did ye think they're Irish girls?
asked Dennis of Finegan? Why de ye think that? Please to answer that question for me.

Och, with the greatest pleasure, responded

Finegan at the same time leaving his knife
and fork each side of his plate. The reason I took them for Irish girls was, because they were very handsome and good natured into the bargain.

Hush! bad ces to ye, said Dennis, hold
that tongue of yours between your teeth,
or else, it will get ye into some trouble before ye can have time to say, Jack Robinson.

Finegan, says more nor his prayers,
quietly remarked Murphy, as he was swallowing the last mouthful of his dinner, but Dennis, haven't ye got a little drop of the crathure to wash this dry mate down my throat?

Well, if a man didn't have his prayers he couldn't say 'em. Isn't that so, Dennis? replied Finegan, with a broad grin on his healthy-looking face.

Hold on now boys, said Dennis, who looked gravely at Finegan and Murphy, it is my turn to speak now, an' I want ye all to listen
to me.

We are all attention, answered Murphy,
but get the bottle first.

There's a few political meetin' words
again interrupted Finegan.

Will ye let me speak at all, at all? asked Dennis. What the doce is got in to ye, I'd like to know?

A most beautiful dinner, I'm thinking
ejaculated Murphy, with an known wink of his eye. But no drink yet.

Here Dennis was impatient, and said,—
Well now there, hold yer mill-clapper of a tongue, and let me speak.

Well, then, proceed, as we say in the political meetin's, said Murphy laughingly.

That tall young lady, is my young mistress, Miss Edmonds, and the other little rose, is—

Yer girl, interrupted Murphy.

Why don't ye let me finish? said Dennis. As I said before, the other little rose is her own private servant. There's for ye, now.

Are they Catholics?
Indade, they are not. There's some more of yer nonsense.

Be me soul, said Murphy addressing Dennis, he thinks that all people ought to be good Catholics, whilst himself likes to be a bad one; an' it's my opinion he's not far from that same now.

Faux, replied Finegan, I think that I'm as good as some of my nabors, if the whole truth was told.

But stop yer jokes, and tell me Finegan,
why ye thought they were Catholics? Answer me that.

Bakase they treated us like gentlemen,
more than wood-sawyers.

Bad ces to ye. Do ye mean to say, that a wood-sawyer is not a gentleman, as much as any other man in the world?

Och! Finegan, you are a queer genius, an' no mistake. But where the d— is the bottle, Dennis?

In troth, there are two of us so, Murphy,
replied the other wood-sawyer, as he touched
a lighted match to his old pipe. But come,
this will never do.

Go ahead then, said Murphy, an' I'll be after you like a constable after a thief.

Don't be in a hurry boys, exclaimed Dennis slyly. This is the first time that we've spent an hour in each other's company for some time; so take yer sates, and lay aside
yer hurry an' I'll bring in the bottle.

The servant placed a bottle of brandy and three glasses on the table, much to the delight of his guests.

Och! be me soul, ejaculated Murphy, but
ye'r goin' to do the thing up decent, I see.

He is the boy that always have done that same, responded Finegan.

Drink! drink boys, said Dennis, placing the glasses and bottle nearer to his companions.

Don't be afraid, boys, the young ladies
won't come in to disturb ye, so drink it down and stop yer prate. Hurry now.

Well, then, here's luck to us all, archly replied Finegan, as he tossed off a good measure of brandy.

The same to ye all, boys, warmly responded the servant.

Why don't ye drink, Murphy? asked Dennis. What are ye looking at out there?

Och, I forgot all about it, cried Murphy,
as he turned towards his friends. I was looking at those beautiful horses out side the stable door; but, I'll not forget my drink,
though.

Och! ye mean the "Creams," don't ye?
asked the servant rather carelessly.

Yes, replied Murphy, and I tell ye what it is, I an' Finegan saw a pair of horses
just like 'em some weeks ago, but where I can't say.

Let me see them, said Finegan, as he rose from his chair and went over to the window
where Murphy was standing.

Yes, be gorry, ye're right, for wanst in yer life, continued Finegan, we did, sure enough, see them horses before, or else, me eyes tell lies. That next baste to us, has a zore leg, I see, what's the matter wid it, Dennis.

Well, let's have another drink, and then
I'll tell ye, all 'bout it remarked Dennis.

Other, other, as they say in the political meetin' was Murphy's response.

Hold on till I wet me whistle, an' then ye can proceed wid yer discourse, as they in the polit—

There ye go agin, interrupted Finegan,
who was anxious to hear Dennis' story.

Murphy laughed heartily, for now the brandy was strongly operating in his head,
and he felt really happy, and brim full of jokes and botherations.

Well, I won't speak another word till he gets through wid his story, was Murphy's reply, at the same time helping himself to the brandy.

Well, now we well see if you will be as good as your word; so, go on Dennis,
and let us hear all the particulars if ye please.

Dennis told them the story in his own odd
way; about the horses running up Broadway,
and how Mr. Edmonds, Mrs. Edmonds, Mr.
Charles, and Miss Elizabeth Edmonds were thrown out of the sleigh near Madison Square

—how narrowly they escaped with their lives,
and last of all, how some young man was badly hurt in trying to stop the horses' speed.

When he had finished his story Murphy
arose and asked him several questions relative to the catastrophe.

Sure enough, said Finegan, but the Lord
was good to preserve them from harm, and it's meself that is glad of it.

Yes, and indade, so am I too, responded Murphy, but I'm sorry for that poor young man, ye speak of, for I suppose he is dead
by this time.

Mr. Edmonds put his name in the papers, but it was of no use, for we never heard from him, or seen him since.

What's that ye say? exclaimed Finegan,
in astonishment, addressing Dennis. Did ye say that Mr. Edmonds put his name in the papers, and that ye didn't see him since?

They are the words that I've said, quietly replied Dennis. Why do ye both look so queer?

But, here, continued Dennis, is the paper,
and there is the piece, (pointing out with his finger the article as it appeared the morning preceding the catastrophe) and rade it for yourselves.

Murphy read the account of the accident
with interest, until he came to that part of it,
where it read, "He was taken to his home
on P— street, by two kind hearted fish-
men, who happened to see him at the time,"
and then he left the paper on the table, and said to Dennis, Finegan an' I are the chaps
that done that same thing.

Yis, now I remember all about it, replied Finegan. An' didn't his poor mother and sister feel bad when we took the poor fellow
into the house.

Ah, stop yer jokes, boys, said Dennis,
for it is too sure a thing to joke about.

Pon my soul we're not jokin', at all, at all,
repeated Murphy, very seriously.

Is Murphy in earnest, enquired Dennis, of Finegan, who rather doubted the former's veracity as regarded his remarks concerning the young hero.

Och, the devil a lie is in it, replied Finegan, for we are the very ones that took 'em
to his home. But we've never seen or heard from him since, no more nor yourselves; but know where he lives though.

Hold on, boys, exclaimed Dennis, I'll be back in a minute. Hold on, said Dennis,
as he left the room.

Where the devil has he gone to? asked Murphy of his companion, Finegan, who was really surprised at the sudden disappearance of their friend Dennis, from the room.

I'll bet you my day's wages, replied Finegan, that he has gone after another bottle
of the crathure.

The devil have me, exclaimed Murphy,
in a tone of surprise, as he held the bottle
up before him, if this bottle isn't just finished,
out an' out; an' here, it's three o'clock in the afternoon, an' be the power of Moses, ye can't kach me, saw another stick of hickry
this day of our lord. De ye hear that Mr.
Finegan—not forgetting to put great emphasis on the Mr.

Och, it's well I know ye, said Finegan
for it's yerself that's as stubborn as a mule
when ye likes.

Be me soul, it's the truth ye hit that denis was Murphy's rejoinder; but where is Dennis, I want to know.

Hold yer tongue, an' be hanged to ye,
said Finegan, for I hear some one comin'
this way.

Och, I hope it's Dennis wid totter bottle of brandy, said Murphy, as he placed his hands in his pantaloons' pockets.

Whist! here he comes, whispered Finegan. Hold that tongue of yours quiet for a minute.

O! Gentlemen, gentlemen! exclaimed
Miss Elizabeth, as she rushed into the servants' room, in company with her favorite servant, Mary. Dennis has told me all, but I want to hear about my preserver—my deliverer, from your own lips; and Elizabeth grew as white as chalk before the two woodsawyers.

Murphy cast a sly wink at Finegan, and said to him in a low whispering voice: Och,
it's too bad, Finegan, that the beautiful angel is out of her mind.

O! Gentlemen, do tell me all about the young man that you carried to his home;
tell me, for I am impatient to hear his sacred and even cherished name. I will, most assuredly, reward you both for it, far beyond your expectations.

Be gorry, she must be crazy, said Finegan. I don't know what she means, at all,
at all. But Murphy, said he, as you are the best scholar, spake to her, and tell her all about 'em, an' then we'll go home for the day.

Well, just as ye say, Finegan, was Murphy's reply; and so he told all the particulars to Miss Edmonds, who listened to him
with the utmost attention to the end.

Murphy told his story in his usual quiet
and witty style, although somewhat embarrased; being, as he was, in the presence of the peerless Miss Edmonds, and also,
her servant and confidential friend, Mary Whitney.

Now, I've told ye all, Miss, said Murphy,

with a little envy and malice, and prepares its small dishes of scandal and nice bits of detraction it becomes endowed with a slight venomous vitality, which does pretty well in the absence of soul, to carry on the machinery of living, if not the reality of life.—E. P. Whipple.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, May 1st, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

TO OUR PATRONS. Our advertising friends of late, have been so bountiful in their favors; that we have scarce space left for other miscellaneous matter. They have our best thanks for the kind manner in which they have remembered us—it will ever be our ambition to retain their esteem, by faithfully serving their interests. In a few days we shall be able to give more attention to other departments of our paper.

ANOTHER TRIAL. The challenge sent by Vulture Engine Company No. 4, to Niagara Engine Company No. 1, for another trial of skill, has been accepted. It will come off at 10 o'clock this morning, at that point of the Canal, near Nathaniel White's Coal Yard. The same programme of arrangements as those of a former occasion, will be presented to-day—filling of the tank, horizontal and other playing. The scene will be an exciting one if we judge rightly from public feeling.

CALIFORNIA. Through the politeness of a friend we have received copies of California papers of a late date. The Chronicle of April 5, a very respectable sheet, well posted up in the news of the day, gives a flattering picture of the future prospects of this State. Business at present, however, it states, is rather dull, although indications of an improvement begins to show itself. Agriculture is now engaging the attention of quite a portion of the people. The mining interest is also reported as prosperous; rich gold fields have been discovered which promise a most plentiful yield of the precious metals. The rainy season had just closed, giving new life to vegetation and fresh facilities to miners. The boiling springs in Wabash Valley, had recently been visited, and are spoken of as among the great curiosities of the country. There are a number of them in a cluster, throwing boiling water to the distance of fifteen feet up into the air, with a roaring sound not unlike that of steam escaping from a high pressure steam engine. There must be a tremendous furnace that underlies all this.

NEW BOARDING HOUSE. Mrs. Daniel French, the matronly lady who so long presided over one of our most popular public houses, it will be perceived by her advertisement is prepared to receive boarders at her new residence on Coddington street. A favorable opportunity is here offered to those in want of pleasant and agreeable quarters.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES. We learn that the Rev. Mr. Pitrat of Scituate, formerly a Catholic Priest, will preach in the Universalist Church, to-morrow. In the evening he intends giving a lecture upon his recent travels in France.

FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE. We think we are doing our friends and readers, a great kindness by informing them, that Messrs. Jackman & Merrill, successors to Keith & Thornton, 29 and 30 Dock Square, sell all kinds of Fashionable Clothing at a less price for Cash, than any other clothing house in Boston. We would recommend purchasers at wholesale or retail, to give them a call. They will deal with you fairly, satisfactorily, and on the square.

FRENCH'S SALOON, corner of Coddington and Washington streets, will present more than its usual attractions on May Day—in honor of the occasion—the trial of skill which is to come off between the Niagara and Vulture Engine Companies. Refreshments in abundance, including his unrivalled "Clam Chowder," will early on that morning be in readiness for the hungry and weary.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. The number for May, which we have received from A. Williams & Co., completes the sixteenth volume of this popular magazine. For sale here by C. Gill & Co.

See Russell's notice in another column. Clothing of almost every description at cost.

Chapman is still with us; but his departure is hourly expected. Don't lose the opportunity of procuring a good Daguerreotype.

Allow a boy to run at large one year in indolence, and you have laid the foundation whereon will be built their future ruin.

Lynnfield Wales of Randolph, depot master on the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad, shot himself through the head with a pistol, at the depot in that town in a fit of melancholy.

For the Patriot.

The Orthodox Society.

Mr. Editor:—With the last Sabbath commenced the pastoral duties of the Rev. Mr. Thayer, at the Orthodox Church. After so long a period of contention and strife, to which this Society had been subjected by the course pursued by their late pastor, the mild and persuasive eloquence of Mr. Thayer, fell like a summer rain upon the new mown grass, reviving the hopes of the despairing and giving promise of a rich harvest in that field of religion and moral improvement.

Mr. Clark early imbibed a dislike to some of the prominent and most useful members of this Society; and unwisely carried his animosities into the pulpit; this unchristian course lays at the foundation of all his troubles. With a temperament unsuited to his position, prejudice ripened into hatred, and hatred into strife, feeling that the decisions of the law would sustain him he listened to the advice of Aitophel, and he did not hesitate to adopt the course which he thought would drive the people into his views; forgetting that public opinion is stronger than law—a power to which it must eventually bend.

Mr. Clark lacked that humility which is the basis of the christian character. "He that exalteth himself shall be abased"—and the usual penalty followed the transgression of this principle: an aptitude in perverting facts impaired confidence in his statements. Truthfulness is required of all who wish to sustain a reputation without reproach, for misrepresentation is only another form of falsehood; a sin venial only in the view of those whose moral obliquities have been hardened by experience.

In his dealings with his church, Mr. Clark disregarded the great principle upon which all our institutions rest; that the voice of the majority must rule; any other principle than this, is the very essence of despotism, for a despot is a minority power, over which the people have no control. His attempt to accomplish this is illustrated in that unworthy course which he pursued at his own house, in which, with his countenance and support, a small minority under pretence of discipline, attempted to deprive others of the right of voting to call a council for advice and direction: a right which none, we hope will ever surrender, in matters in which they are concerned, in a town that gave birth to Hancock, and holds the graves of the Adamses and Quincys. The grounds upon which this action and the assumption of a minority to rule a majority are based, and so frivolous that we forbear to name them; they are worthy only of the pen of Dickens, or the pencil of Hogarth.

When Mr. Clark refused to listen, at the very commencement of this controversy, to the earnest solicitation of the Society to join in a mutual council for the adjustment of their difficulties, he committed an error which a life time will hardly correct. If he acted under the conviction that individuals were held for the corporate debts of the Society, which was boisterously proclaimed by his adherents, he must soon have been convinced of the fallacy of this mercenary idea, for investigation soon exposed the error, and put this question at rest.

"Sweet are the uses of adversity," and if the parties to this controversy rightly apply the lesson of experience that has been taught by it, they will shun the errors of the past and gather wisdom from the correction they have sustained. The clergy must learn to respect the rights of the people, and lead them by cords of love, rather than by the rod of authority, which is but as a broken reed before the influence of popular feeling.

WOLFE'S CELEBRATED

Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps.

THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured by the proprietor, at Schiedam, Holland, expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own Factory. It is pure Tincture of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose more vinous extract is distilled and rectified with its spirituous solvent, which thus becomes a concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and aroma, altogether, transcendent in its cordial and medicinal properties to any alcoholic stimulant now made in the world. It is now prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout, Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints.

Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

Poetry.

[BY REQUEST.]

On Presenting a Bible to Miss J. E. P.

This hallowed book to you I give,
But not its truths Divine;
For those, your Heavenly Father gave:
They with His wisdom shine.

More precious they than priceless gems,
Unto the heart they come:
They weave a wreath of fadeless flowers,
Of purer life and better home.

I give it as a friendship's gift—
Tells of the past in times—
Speaks of bright days and those of shade;
But true thy heart to mine.

The flowers of Earth may all decay;
Their fragrance fade and die;
But those of mind, will ever shine—
Their coronet high.

As time shall pass and change may come
O'er all things—sad or gay;
The hand that now doth pencil this,
May chance have passed away.

But friendship is a precious boon,
By Angel hands is given,
From God the great Eternal One—
Its home is near to Heaven.

Let's treasure then with faith and care,
And call its flowers so beautiful rare;
Let's pray if it is sundered here,
To bind the chain of friendship there!

For the Patriot.

To a Friend on her Seventeenth Birthday.

BY MRS. C. A. HAYDEN.

Just Seventeen! and life has been,
To thee one long, bright summer's day;
And memory o'er the maplike scene,
May linger long and joyously.

The past, the happy glorious past,
Should only breathe of love and duty;
And time no dim reflections cast,
To blight its joy or mar its beauty.

Just Seventeen! and life is now,
With radiant light just dawning o'er thee;
And many a flower to crown thy brow,
Is sweetly springing up before thee.

And thine own hand may mar, or make
The undying wreath that bloom to weave thee;
And thine own soul may hush or wake,
The music which shall joy or grieve thee.

Just Seventeen! and future years,
Shall paint no more the bright ideal;
But many a lesson dimmed by tears,
Shall prove that sorrow's touch is real.

Yet deep within thine inmost soul,
Lie buried gems, whose wealth was given;
To pierce the depths which round thee roll,
And gild thy path from earth to heaven.

Help the Erring.

Would'st thou an erring soul redeem,
And lead a lost one back to God;
Would'st thou a guardian angel seem
To one who long in guilt has trod?

Go kindly to him—take his hand,
With gentle words, within thine own;
Add by his side a brother's hand,
Till thou the demon, sin, dethrone.

Scorn not the guilty, then, but plead
With him, in kindest, gentlest mood,
And back the lost one thou mayest lead
To God! humbly and good!

Thou art thyself but man, and thou Art weak, perchance, to fall as he;
Then mercy to the fallen show,
That mercy may be shown to thee!

Anecdotes.

Well Annie, how did you get along with that stupid fool of a lover of yours? You succeeded, then, in getting rid of him?
O, yes! I got rid of him easily. I married him, and have no lover now.

An Irishman met a friend who was suffering from a pulmonary complaint, and accosted him thus:
I say, Tom, how are you?
I am getting on slowly, was his reply.
Well, I don't wish to worry you, Tom, but it is my opinion you won't be well till you get your health!

Did you not tell me, sir, you could hold the plow? said the master.
Arrah! be easy now, said Pat. How the deuce can I hold it, and two horses drawing it away from me? but give it me into the barn, and be jabbers I'll hold it with any boy.

Mother, said a little jealous four-year old, whose nose had been "put out of joint," by the recent arrival of a baby brother, Mother, if the baby should die, would it go to heaven.

Certainly my child, responded the parent. Then I think heaven is the best place for him, was the affectionate sister's conclusion.

Look here, Pete, said a knowing darkey to his companion,—"Don't stand on de railroad."
Why, Joe?

Kase, if de cars see dat mouf of yours, dey will tink it am a depot, and run it in.

Can you tell me Billy, how it is that chancier always keeps his feathers so sleek and smooth?

No.
Well, I'll tell you. He always carries his comb with him.

Pure Potash

And 38 India Street, Boston.
THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years seen the necessity of having
some reliable standard for the strength of POT-
ASH. The adulteration has become so general,
that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, gone nearly out of use. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of supplying his name
to every package, and securing the strength to be a standard, and when used always producing the same results. Potash purity is ascertained
with salt, which is destructive in making soap;
but the Larders they may not have good results. The other reason that Potash has gone out of use, is, it is adulterated to lands,
being put in wooden cases, and becoming a liquid
in many cases, and very troublesome to the restoration.
Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potash,
always being the same strength, and producing
the same results; and will warrant it in all cases,
if the directions are followed, to produce domestically the best effect in making soap, and all other purposes for which Potash is used, was told directions for making the best of Soft, Hard, or Fancy

is all prepared in five or ten minutes.

BEST SALERATUS,
IS prepared entirely different from other Saleratus. It is a pure, non-stimulant extractant such a manner as to produce Blood, Liver, and all kinds of Cakes, without containing a particle
of saleratus when the bread or cake is baked;
thereby producing wholesome results. Every particle of Saleratus is turned to Gas and passes through the bread or biscuit while baking, causes quickly nothing remains but Common Salt, Water
and Flour. You will readily perceive by the taste of this Saleratus that it is entirely different
from other Saleratus. When you purchase one package you should take the old paper with you, and
be very particular and get the public, that

with a glass enclosing water on the top, as you see in the full.

CHAPTER VI.
Our daughter is unusually gay this evening,
said Mrs. Edmonds, addressing her husband as he was sipping his tea in a very thoughtful mood.
Well, I am very glad to hear it, my dear,
was his reply, at the same time casting a fond
and fatherly look of affection at his daughter,
who returned it in a like manner.
Elizabeth could not contain herself, or keep the secret any longer in her mind, and
with great animation she said:—
Oh, I have such good news for you all, and I am sure you will rejoice with me when I tell you the welcome news.
Well, let us hear it, was the unanimous response of her father.
I've found out the name and residence of the man whom we have so much sought after, and I am so delighted, that I scarcely know what to do with myself.
How, or in what way did you receive this information? asked Mr. Edmonds, who was much pleased at this almost forgotten subject.
From those wood-sawyers you employed
to-day, responded Miss Elizabeth.
Ha, ha, ha! shouted Charles, I really do rejoice with you sister, for the much-looked-for intelligence.
Indeed, I am delighted to hear it, replied
Mr. Edmonds. It is not too late now to reward him for the heroic part he played in saying us from instant death.
Why, indeed, I am really astonished, remarked Mrs. Edmonds, that you are all carried away by the foolish talk of two ignorant
wood-sawyers.
Oh, mother! pray do not say so. Truth,
although it may come from ignorant men,
as you are pleased to call them, is truth still,
and bears upon its pure white banner the broad seal of immortality. That those woodsawyers are poor, I do not deny, but that they are ignorant and not possessed of noble, manly hearts, would be the last thing to enter my mind. I am sure, continued Miss Edmonds, looking kindly at Dennis who was standing behind Mrs. Edmonds' chair, and who was evidently very much pleased at her truly praise-worthy remarks, I am sure,
I found them kind, intelligent and warm-hearted; and furthermore, it would be very imprudent in us, who profess true Christianity, to doubt the truth, no matter whether it come from the lips of the rich or poor of earth; at least, such is my belief in such matters.
You are right, my dear daughter, responded the father. I shall make it my special business to call on him to-morrow, if you will favor me with his name and place of residence.
Be sure you order your carriage at an early hour, my dear, replied Mrs. Edmonds rather sarcastically; and you, Miss, must not forget to accompany your papa, as you seem
so overjoyed on the occasion.
The above ironical remarks by Mrs. Edmonds, caused a deep wound in the heart of the sensitive Elizabeth, and she immediately
retired from the breakfast room with emotions of overwhelming sorrow.
She retired to her room, threw herself on to the lounge, and wept bitterly as she often had done before.
A beautiful carriage attached to a span of high-spirited horses was seen standing opposite the door of an humble looking dwelling,

on S— street, and an elderly-looking gentleman, might have been seen stepping from the carriage. His countenance looked the very picture of benevolence and true gently bearing. After him followed a young lady, of about sixteen summers, whose intellectual countenance indicated a mind of no
ordinary calculation, and a close observer,
could see at a glance that she was a young lady of high parentage, highly accomplished,
and possessed a heart equal to her beauty,
which is saying a great deal.
The gentleman rang the bell, and making a very polite bow to an elderly lady who opened the door, he asked if a young man
by the name of Herbert Ulrick lived there?
and if so, whether or not he was at home.
Walk in if you please, said a venerable-looking lady, who was not a little astonished
at the appearance of a superb carriage at her door, as well as the distinguished personages
who stood before her, and who also presented her their cards.
The distinguished visitors were shown in-
to a plain, but scrupulously neat, little parlor,
with nothing more in it, than is generally seen in the so-called parlors of the poor and humble of our own country. But yet, so tastefully was every thing arranged, that the most fastidious lady could not reasonably find fault to complain about.
Mrs. Ulrick presented the visiting cards
of the unknown strangers to her son, and requested him not to delay very long.
What do they want of me, mother, asked
Herbert, rather anxiously.
I am sure I don't know, my son, but I beg of you to hasten down stairs, and then your inquiring mind will be relieved, responded
the hero's mother.
Perhaps they have made a mistake, mother, said Herbert, who was much bewildered
in mind at this sudden-interruption; for he did not know how he should act before the strangers, who awaited him in the parlor.
He, however, summoned up courage, came down stairs, and with a throbbing heart and flushed cheek entered the room.
Mr. Ulrick, is it not? asked Mr. Edmonds,
as he moved towards him.
That is my name sir, replied Herbert, at the same time riveting his eyes in the direction of Miss Edmonds, who was seated on the old fashioned sofa.
My God! exclaimed Mr. Edmonds passionately; do you not remember us?
I confess, sir, I do not. Pray, what mean you?
How came you with that long gash on your cheek, asked the merchant in a tone of deep interest.
By trying to save the lives of others at the cost of my own, was Herbert's reply.
Herbert told the visitors the whole story,
in rather an amusing manner, much to their delight, coming, as it did, from his lips.
Sir, you are the saviour of my wife, daughter and myself. Name your reward and it shall be granted you immediately.
Sir, responded Herbert, I have done nothing more than my duty, and I would be vile indeed, if I accepted a compensation from you.
Please to accept of my cheek for one thousand dollars on the Merchants Bank, said
the merchant with earnestness and heartfelt expression.
I thank you most kindly, sir, for your very liberal offer, but I cannot under any circumstance, whatever, comply with your generous request.
Will you not comply with my father's request, for my sake, sir? asked Miss Edmonds,
most earnestly; at the same time advancing towards the hero, and extending her soft and velvety hand to him.
Most willingly would I do it Miss Edmonds, responded Herbert, but you see (showing her the diamond ring which she presented to him on the memorable night of the catastrophe,) that I am more than rewarded; therefore, I beg you to excuse me.
Miss Edmonds could say no more, for her heart was overflowing with deep sympathies
for him who stood before her; pale and careworn as he was. Had she followed the dictates of her own noble heart, she would have acted differently; but her father's presence
kept her in check, and therefore she was compelled to act contrary to the promptings of her womanly nature.
Well, then, said Mr. Edmonds, will you be kind enough to honor me with your presence to dinner on to-morrow, at six P. M.
I will send my carriage after you at an early hour, so that you can avoid fatigue, and the inconvenience of a long walk.
Herbert paused for some time, not knowing what reply to make, and ere he responded to Mr. Edmonds, Elizabeth, hastily remarked:—
I hope and trust sir, you will not decline
my father's invitation.
I am thankful indeed, for the high honor
you have conferred upon me, and I most cheerfully accept your invitation, was Herbert's reply.

Mr. Edmonds and his daughter exchanged salutations with Herbert, entered their carriage, and the coachman cracked his whip
and drove rapidly towards home, for he was both cold and chilly. The north wind was really piercing, and delay was anything but pleasant to others, as well as to the coachman.
Well, Herbert, said Mrs. Ulrick, pray do tell us the news. Oh! I'm so impatient to hear it.
Immediately, mother. Sit down on your favorite chair, and you shall hear all.
The hero related to his beloved mother,
all that had been said in the parlor by Mr.
Edmonds, Miss Edmonds and himself, and
her heart was overjoyed.
Oh! I wish in my heart that Phebe would come home from the store, for she will be so pleased to hear of this unexpected honor conferred on her brother, was the old lady's warm exclamation to her dear son.
Mother, responded our hero, sadly, indeed
it grieves me to have poor sister Phebe work
so from morning till night, for that poor, narrow-minded, mean and selfish Mr. Little.
She takes care of his business as well as herself, and for years has she toiled in his store for just enough to keep herself decently clothed; and he was never man enough
to present her with a decent present.
But that I do not mind so much if he had acted like a gentleman towards Phebe, when sister Ellen was sick. You well know mother, that Phebe was most diligent in her attention to poor Ellen, who is now in Heaven.
And for a few weeks before her death, Phebe
remained by her bedside, day and night.
But at last it pleased God to take her to himself, and thus ended her weary life on earth.
I know, I know, my son, interrupted the old lady, wiping the big tears from her be-dimmed eyes, I am aware of all that you say,
Herbert, and methinks I see my dear-loved Ellen now, in a happier and brighter world
than this; and I will soon meet her, Herbert,
in our Father's mansion above.
Do not weep so, mother, said Herbert, for sister Ellen is better off than if she remained here below, in this crude and deceitful world.
But as I was going to remark a few minutes ago, Mr. Little was mean enough to charge sister with lost time. If she was on a tour of pleasure or profit it would be a different thing; but, being as it was, patiently ministering to the wants of Ellen like a good sister, and as a good sister should do, the hour of sickness—it is really too bad to have to record such a mean piece of meanness on Mr. Little's part. And what is still more aggravating to contemplate, he calls himself
a Christian and wears a long, sober face, and appears sanctimonious before his brethren at large. Oh! the deceitfulness of this world, mother.
Herbert, my son, said Mrs. Ulrick, do not judge men too harshly, for I trust, that all will be well by-and-by, at least, I hope so.
Indeed, so do I, mother, replied Herbert,
with a deep sigh; and I trust the day is not far distant when I may be able to take Phebe away from Little's dry goods store, and support you and her comfortably; 'tis the wish of my poor, sad and beating heart, and—
Here comes Phebe, now, said the mother,
as she went to the door to meet her, as was her wont at dinner and supper hours; for none but a true mother knows and feels the absence of a good and devoted daughter.
Phebe was one of those most devoted and dutiful daughters, and it was no wonder that she was so much loved by her mother and brother; and indeed, she loved them in return. All who knew Phebe Ulrick loved her, for her gay and sprightly manner; and her merry, ringing laugh drove away a thousand weary troubles from the over-burdened hearts of those who came into, or sought her cheerful company.
Loving, gentle Phebe! Methinks I see her now, standing before me in all her true,
lady-like loveliness, and childlike simplicity.
Her form so finely moulded—her bright and heavenly blue eyes looking with smiles of sweet innocence into mine—lips that would tempt almost a saint of earth to kiss—hair
black as the fall of a dreary winter's night;
that fell in heavy ringlets on her neck of snowy whiteness—a complexion fair as the lily—teeth pearly white, and hands as soft
and true that a queen might envy them.
But more than all this, Phebe Ulrick possessed a large heart, and she deeply sym-pathized with the poor and oppressed; and wept with the sorrowful and the broken-hearted. She was well educated in a New England academy, and her good mother instilled into her youthful mind, lessons of piety, benevolence and charity.
Kind reader, in the next chapter I will give you a brief sketch of our young hero
and secluded student, Herbert Ulrick.

CHAPTER VII.
Charles Ulrick—our hero's father—was one of Nature's noblemen; a highly and respectable farmer, and was the owner of the finest farm in the neighborhood of Portland, Maine. Like many other celebrated men,

he was the architect of his own fortune; for
he worked early and late to obtain it,
and under summer's sun or winter's icy frown, he might have been seen by his good neighbors, at all hours of the day the year round, busily engaged working, working,
working! not for himself, to use his own words, but for his much loved children. He was blessed with six children—three boys and three girls. Phebe was the pet of her mother, and Herbert was the pet of his father;
for they were not, whilst in their infancy as robust nor as healthily-looking as their brothers and sisters. Consequently, Mr. and Mrs. Ulrick came to the conclusion one night, that Phebe would never make a farmer's wife, and that Herbert was too delicate to handle a plough, now, or do any other laborious work on the farm; and so they came to the determination to give them
a good education regardless of all expenses.
Herbert was always passionately fond of books and secluded meditation; and Phebe
was never more happy than when plucking
flowers by some murmuring stream; or else,
rambling with merry heart through the silent
and lonely woods; for Nature to her was ever lovely, grand and sublime.
In due time, Herbert and his sister, Phebe,
entered upon their scholastic studies at the academy of B—, where future hopes and high expectations lured them on in their academic studies, and hoped that at a future day, they would be able to reach the lofty summit of their expectations.
Ambition, that great and powerful engine
to noble deeds—filled a large space in Herbert's mind; and, excellent—still onward—
was the young student's motto.
He prosecuted his studies with an iron will, and a firm resolution, which gained for him the love and esteem of his teachers;
nor was his sister Phebe alone in her rounds
of deep and interesting studies. She, too,
won the praise of both teachers and pupils;
and was highly complimented by all who knew her.
For three years did Herbert remain at the academy of B—; and in a few months
more he was in hopes of entering the college of D—, to complete his education.
But alas! he was doomed to disappointments,
trials and troubles.
Mr. Ulrick was a great speculator in land,
stock, &c., and was generally very fortunate in all his business transactions. But all at once, he became a poor man, through the deep deception of others who had a snare
to entrap him; for they envied his great success as well as his large and well cultivated farm, and well fitted coffers; all of which, he honestly earned, and which by just right, belonged to him.
His farm was sold to cover his debts,
and he was once more bereft of everything
but his cheerful cottage, and a few acres of land. This, indeed, was a heavy blow to Mr. Ulrick; very heavy, for it was the cause of his death, and also, was the cause of the death of four of his children, and came very near ending the life of poor Mrs.
Ulrick.
The neighbors said, that Mr. U. and his children died of broken hearts, and that they were right in their conjectures, for so it was,
alas!
Mrs. Ulrick sold her neat and much loved cottage, together with four acres of land adjoining it, and remained with a relative for a few months to await the arrival of her two children, Herbert and Phebe, whom she expected from B—; where they had returned after the death of their father, to bid
a last farewell to their teachers and classmates.
Poor Herbert, with a heart too full with grief, entered for the last time the old familiar recitation room, where sat his much loved colleagues, and walking slowly up to one of his teachers, (who grasped him warmly by the hand, and who deeply sympathized with him in his sorrow) told him, that all his bright hopes were crushed to earth, and that darkness and gloom filled the once bright chambers of his heart.
You could hear a pin drop on the floor, so quiet and still were the students; and tears
of sadness and commiseration stole down
the cheeks of many of the wild but noble hearted friends and schoolmates of Herbert Ulrick, as he stood before them with his pale face and intellectual forehead, upon which was stamped the broad seal of genius.
Mr. Benson, who was the principal of the Academy, requested him before leaving, to address his young friends, which he did, in an interesting and eloquent manner; and when he had finished, there was no apause, no smiles, no confusion among the students as was their wont on other occasions. A solemn stillness reigned in every heart present, until Mr. Benson arose from his seat, and in a very neat and appropriate speech, deeply sympathized with and highly praised the fine talents, and gentle disposition of his esteemed young pupil, Herbert Ulrick, which was warmly responded to by all the students in the room.

But deep as was the sympathy exhibited by Herbert's warm friends, there was still greater sympathy felt for the mild and gentle Phebe, by her many schoolmates and companions; for she was their best planner,
and was always looked upon as their leader
in all sorts of wild schemes and girlish
sports, ere sorrow and gloom had cast other thick folds around her once merry heart.
There was little or no studying done on that day at the academy of B— for Herbert
and Phebe Ulrick were to leave at 8 o'clock, in the stage coach for their home. No, they had no home now. I should have said, to join their mother, who was waiting their arrival every day with the greatest impatience.
At the appointed hour the stage was waiting at the door of Mrs. Williams, where Herbert and Phebe boarded, surrounded by all the members of the Academy; and while the driver was arranging their baggage,
kisses, caresses and hearty shaking of hands
were lavished profusely on Phebe and Herbert, and all etiquette, was, for the time-being, forgotten.
Few, indeed, were the words that passed between either party; for grief, heartfelt grief, was brooding in their hearts, and the young ladies and gentlemen signified their deep emotions by the waving of snow-white handkerchiefs, and bowing of heads, until
the stage coach was lost in the distance.
Mrs. Ulrick, her son and daughter, started immediately for New York city, where her brother, who was a sea captain by profession, resided.
After their arrival in the city, Mrs. Ulrick told the hackman to drive her to number twenty, C— street, but imagine her surprise and astonishment, on ascertaining from a lady who lived next door to her brother's house, that he (the captain) had sailed one week before for the East Indies.
She had forgotten to write to her brother
previous to her departure for New York,
nor did she have the remotest idea of making
New York her future home until a few days before she started on her journey. Hence, the mistake. But she soon made the best shift she could under the circumstances, and in a few weeks she was comfortably situated in P— street, where the reader will remember the interviews took place between Mr.
Edmonds, his daughter, and our young hero,
Herbert, after his arrival in New York,
was not long out of employment, for he was a good book-keeper, and a fine plain writer;
consequently, he sought and found a lucrative situation in an insurance office, in Wall street, where he was loved and highly respected by his employers.
Herbert spent his spare moments in drawing and portrait painting. He was passionately fond of painting and music while a student at the academy of B—, and it was his intention, as well as his natural inclination, previous to his father's death, to become, at some future day, a celebrated painter or musician.
To him, the dull routine of an insurance
clerk, was tedious in the extreme; but, circumstances compelled him, for a while, at least, to resign himself to fate and trust to the future.
Instead of squandering his precious time
after office hours—as hundreds and thousands of New York clerks do—he would play his favorite lute, much to the gratification
of his doating mother, or sing some favorite song with his sister Phebe, or retire to his little room, which he styled his "study,"
and then would he open the long midnight hours, prosecuting his much loved study of painting and music. The outer world to him was of little consequence; for in his own profane and imaginative mind, he made a bright world of his own, and peopled it with pur-beings of his own ideal conception. His restless mind was ever busy thinking of the bright and glorious future.
Oh! thou ever bright and glorious star of hope; mayst thou ever shine forth in all thy sweet and holy radiance, to inspire and strengthen the sad and oppressed of earth's poor, but heroic sons and daughters.

Privacy.
It should be a rule between all friends to accept just that much of each other's confidence as is freely and voluntarily given—Every person has a sacred and inalienable right which should be respected to the very letter, even by the most intimate and dearest friends.
It is a common saying, and a very mischievous one, that there should be—No secrets between man and wife. A woman has just as much right to withhold a full expression of her innermost thoughts after marriage as before, and a man has, of course,
the same. When all is laid bare—the fullest recesses of the heart—the very adyta of the soul's temple—the two will almost inevitably tire of each other. There is nothing
now—they have told all they know, and nothing more can be said between them, except mere common-places, which soon become ennui.
This right of privacy is not sufficiently well understood in the world. Near friends are too apt to assume the power of prying
into and criticising each other's hearts.
They should be more careful, more respectful, and ask fewer questions. If friends generally would take a common-sense view of the subject, they would see that what A chooses to tell B is B's business, and he may listen and criticize that, as much as he likes.
What A does not tell B is sacred to A. The simple fact that he did not see fit to impart
it ought to satisfy B that it is none of his business, and the less he tries to pry into it,
the better A will like him.

Settlement of Quincy.
Next Thursday, the 13th of May, will be the two hundred and eighteenth anniversary
of the incorporation of the town of Braintree,
now Quincy. The settlement was commenced in 1725 by Capt. Wollaston, thus making it the first permanent settlement in Massachusetts Colony. In connection with this we wish to state a few facts concerning the Plantation previous to its incorporation.
After Morton's arrest and banishment, in 1630, the Plantation settled down into a more quiet state.
May 14th, 1634, the General Court made enlargement to Boston, by granting them large tracts of land at the Mount, as will be seen by the following vote:
"Furthermore; the Court hath ordered,
that Boston shall have convenient enlargement, at Mount Woolston,* to be set out
by four indifferent men, whose shall draw
a plot thereof, and present it to the next General Court, when it shall be confirmed.
Mr. Oldham, Mr. Aspinwall, Mr. Coxswell, Serant Stoughton and William Felps are chosen to view the place, and to certify the next General Court thereof."
In September of the same year, Boston received another enlargement at the Mount,
which enlargement gave to her about all the territory of the town. In 1635, as an inducement to settle here, she made certain grants of land to individuals. The first grant according to the Boston town records, were to Mr. William Coddington and Edmund Quincy, 14th of the 10th month; and immediately after this, is recorded the following vote; 4th of the 11th month:
"Item; It is agreed, that all the allotments at Mount Woolstone shalbe set out by Mr. Coddington, William Collburn, William Aspinwall, Edmund Quincy and Richard Wright, or some four of them,
and that every allotment shall have convenient proportion of meadows thereunto, according to their number of cattell that have the same."
Mr. Wilson of the first church of Boston, also, had land given to him here, as well as
Mr. Hutchinson, who was husband to Mrs.
Hutchinson, of Antinomian notoriety. Mr.
Wheelwright, brother-in-law to Mrs. Hutchinson, and the first minister who preached here, previous to the incorporation of the church, 1639, had a grant of two hundred and fifty acres of land at the Mount. It was here he preached his Fast Day sermon, 1639, which was not very acceptable to the Puritans, and created no little excitement at that period, as will be seen by the following orders of the General Court, March 30th, 1639-7.
"The Court did conclude that Mr. Wheelwright was guilty of contempt and sedition, Nov. 2, 1637. Mr. John Wheelwright being formerly convicted of contempt and sedition
and now justifying himself and his former practice, being to the disturbance of the civil peace, hee is by the Court disfranch-ized and banished having fourteen days to settle his affairs."
After his banishment he removed to New Hampshire, and there became the founder of the town of Exeter. He was an able minister, and will ever rank among the first class of New England clergymen,—was many years before the times in his views, with reference to true and rational theology, and ecclesiastical sentiments, as the above sermon will bear testimony—it having advocated the doctrine, that true religion could live and have a being in the heart, independent of works, long faces and punctilious observances. Many other prominent and leading men of Boston held grants of land and removed here.
* In our "extracts" we have followed the peculiar orthography and quaint phraseology of the times.

The following is the grant of township to Brantree and the conditions upon which it was made.

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF BRANTREE MAY 13th, 1840.

"The petition of the inhabitants of Mount Woolstone, was voted and granted them to be a town according to the agreement with Boston, provided, that if Br., they fulfil not the covenant made with Boston, and heartily to recover their due by action against the said inhabitants, or any of them and the town, and the town is to be called Brantree. It was agreed with our neighbors of Mount Woolstone, vid. William Cheesbrook, Alexander Winchester, Richard Wright, James Pennington, and in the name of the rest, (for whom they undertook) that they should give to Boston the acre for two acres of the seven acres formerly granted to divers M. (men) of Boston, upon expectation they should have continued still with us, and 3s the acre for every acre which hath been or shall be granted to any others who are not inhabitants of Boston, and that in consideration hereof, and after the said portion of money shall be paid to the Town Treasurer, all the said land shall be free from any town rates or charges to Boston; but to be rated by the Court by its self; provided, that the order shall not extend to any more or other lands than such as shall make payment of the said rates so agreed upon of 4s to 3s the acre; and upon the former consideration there is granted to the Mount all that rocky ground lying between the Fresh Brook and Mr. Coddington's Brook, adjoining to Mr. Haugh's farm, and from the west corner of that farm to the southwest corner of Mr. Hutchinson's farm, to be reserved and used in common, forever, by the inhabitants and landholders there together, with any others parcel of rocky ground near to Knight's Neck, which was left out of the third company of lots, excepting all such grounds lying among or near these said rocky grounds formerly granted in lots to particular persons."

"And there is granted to Mr. Thompson, pastor of said church, one hundred and twenty acres, and to Mr. Flint, eighty acres, which are to be free from the rate of 3s the acre."

It will be seen by this that we were formerly a part and parcel of Boston, and in all probability before the close of two more centuries, we shall become a part of Boston again.

Vulture and Niagara Engine Companies.

Previous to Fast Day the several Engine Companies of this town received an invitation from our Chief Engineer, Washington M. French, Esq., to come out with their Engines and have a social play; they accordingly met at the Canal and played under the direction of the Board of Engineers, each one playing into a tank holding nineteen hundred gallons, through an inch and a quarter pipe, and then playing on distance, through any pipe which they pleased. The time given on that day by the Chief Engineer was as follows:

TIME OF FILLING TANK.		min.	sec.
Niagara No. 1	- - -	5	30
Tiger " 2	- - -	5	27
Granite " 3	- - -	7	00
Vulture " 4	- - -	5	38

HORIZONTAL PLAYING.		min.	sec.
Niagara No. 1	192 feet 8 1/2 inches
Tiger No. 2	170 "
Granite No. 3	181 " 3 1/2 "
Vulture No. 4	155 " 1 1/2 "

After the decision was given by the Chief Engineer, the several Companies returned to their houses and with their invited guests partook of collations got up in good style.

Owing to some dissatisfaction as to the result, on the evening of the 21st of April, the Vulture Engine Company, No. 4, held a meeting at their house and challenged the Niagara in the following manner:

COPY OF CHALLENGE.

Quincy Point, April 21st, 1858.

NIAGARA ENGINE COMPANY, No. 1.—The Vulture Engine Company, No. 4, believing the statements published regarding the trial of Engines on Fast Day last, to be incorrect, authorize us (the undersigned) by a vote of the Company, to challenge you to a trial of our respective Engines some time during the present month to play on the same terms as on that day, and without any alteration being made in either Engine.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES T. SHERRILL, Committee.

NATHAN C. PRATT, Committee.
The Niagara accordingly met at their house on Friday evening, April 23d, and the challenge was read by the Foreman, and the Company voted to accept the challenge and to play on May Day, and chose a Committee of three to confer with the Vulture's Committee, and make all necessary arrangements.

The Committee accordingly met and decided upon playing in the same place as on Fast Day, and to abide by the decision of the judges; each Company to choose one man—those two to choose a third, and the three to choose a timekeeper. The Niagara No. 1, chose Philip Carver; the Vulture No. 4, chose E. W. Marsh, and they chose E. A. Spear; the three then chose as timekeeper, B. F. Meservey, clock maker, of this town. The playing to commence at ten o'clock, A. M. On the first of May, the Companies met and the Vulture commenced playing into the Tank at about eleven o'clock, and succeeded in filling it in 5 minutes 12 1/2 seconds, thereby gaining 25 1/2 seconds on their play of Fast Day. The Niagara then drew into place and succeeded in filling the Tank in 4 minutes and 30 seconds, gaining sixty seconds on the play of Fast Day. The Vulture having broken some part of her machinery while playing horizontally, the judges decided to withdraw that part of the challenge. The following is the decision as given by them:

"The undersigned, a Committee appointed on the part of the Niagara and Vulture Engine Companies of Quincy to decide at a trial of their respective Engines this day, report as follows:

FILLING THE TANK.

By an agreement previously entered into between the parties, the time was to be taken when the first drop of water passed through the small tube in the side of the Tank, and in accordance with this rule.

Vulture No. 4, made the time 5 min. 12 1/2 sec.
Niagara No. 1 " " " 4 " 30 "

DISTANCE.

The Vulture having become disabled while playing through the pipe before she had made a full stream, the Committee decide that this part of the trial is drawn.

E. A. SPEAR, Committee.
E. W. MARSH, Committee.
PHILIP CARVER, Committee.

B. F. MESERVEY, Timekeeper.
Quincy, May 1st, 1858."

TANK.

On our first page will be found a very interesting article on the early settlement of this town. The facts have been collated from various sources, with much care and no little trouble, by our correspondent, ANTIQUE, to whom we are under many obligations for similar favors.

RUSSELL, at the Town Hall, is cut with a very attractive playcard, advertising all kinds of clothing at prices but a trifling advance above cost. He is induced to take this step in order to close up his business, prior to his departure for his new home in the West. Bargains we have no doubt may be realized, by taking an early opportunity of calling at the "old stand," Town Hall.

Another School Presentation.

A few days since, Mr. Seth Dewing Jr., of the Willard School in this town, was presented, by his grateful pupils, with an elegant writing desk and materials, in the presence of some of the parents and friends of the children, and a part of the School Committee, who were on that day most opportunely visiting the several schools of the West District.

The address, which followed the presentation, was made in behalf of his young school mates, by master Harrison Nightingale, a son of Mr. Thomas J. Nightingale.

The selection was a fortunate one; and although his remarks were delivered with some emotion as we discovered by the moistened eye, (the more honor to him,) they were well timed and every way appropriate.

We love such scenes; not a passage of arms in words, but the emanation of language dictated by warm hearts, and kindling the best affections of the soul, both on the part of the teacher and pupil. He assured Mr. Dewing of the warm esteem, the whole school cherished toward him, and of their pledge of future obedience and good conduct under his daily care.

The reply of Mr. Dewing was eloquent and feeling. He spoke at some length on his past relations with the school; the pleasant hours he had passed while laboring with his pupils; and, in receiving this unexpected and beautiful donation, as a present from the whole school, he would cherish this unmistakable memento of their love, with respect and gratitude through life. It is seldom that we have heard a better address. It came, every word of it, as the audience well knew, from a noble heart.

Mr. Dewing, we believe, is in his eighth year as a teacher of this school. Through this lengthy period, and with the yearly mutations of the School Committee, he has met with no opposition. It is not often that a teacher is so fortunate, or the people of a district so united in their confidence and esteem. From the reports of the School Committee for years past, his school has ranked as one of the best in town for order, discipline and progress; and it certainly gives high promise of continued success.

For the Patriot. The Quincy Insurance Company.

MR. EDITOR:—Among the Insurance Offices which suffered by the great fire in Federal street on Sunday morning last, I noticed, if the Boston papers are to be believed, that the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company was victimized to the amount of twenty-five hundred dollars. I was somewhat surprised that this office should take a risk as hazardous as that which was contained in the buildings destroyed, and made the inquiry why such a policy should have been issued, and I learnt that the Quincy Mutual had underwritten nothing upon the property burnt, and that this statement, (as was the case in relation to the destruction of Little & Brown's Stock at Cambridgeport, where it was stated that the Quincy Mutual had lost five thousand dollars,) was wholly incorrect. There is a company, a stock company, incorporated as the Quincy Fire and Marine, whose place of business is in Boston, to which these risks are chargeable, and not to the Quincy Mutual.

The Legislature at its last session changed the name of the Quincy Fire and Marine to the Quincy Fire and Marine, and it is to be hoped that for the future each company will bear its own burdens, not alone in cash, but also in credit.

You will find first rate black and brown Hats at C. Gill & Co's. Good variety.

WOLFE'S CELEBRATED
Schickel Aromatic Schnapps.
THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured
by the proprietor, at Schickel, Holland,
expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own Factory. It is pure Tincture
of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose more
valuable extract is distilled and rectified with its spiritous solvent, which thus becomes a concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and
aroma, altogether transcending in its cordial
and medicinal properties to any alcoholic stimulant now made in the world. It is now prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in
the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout,
Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints.
Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases
of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen
pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

Poetry.

The Child and the Mourner.

A little child, beneath a tree
Sat and chanted merrily
A little song, a pleasant song,
Which was—she sang it all day long—
When the wind blows the blossoms fall;
But a good God reigns over all.

There passed a lady by the way,
Mourning in the face of day;
There were tears upon her cheek;
Grief in her heart too great to speak;
Her husband died but yesterday-morn,
And left her in the world forlorn.

She stopped and listened to the child
That looked so heaven, and singing, smiled
And saw not for her own despair,
Another lady, young and fair,
Who also passing, stopped to hear
The infant's anthem ringing clear.

And as they stood beneath the tree
Listening, soothed and placidly,
A youth came by, whose sunken eyes
Spoke of a load of misery;
And he, arrested like the twin,
Stopped to listen to the strain.

Death had bowed the youthful head
Of his bride beloved, his bride unwed;
Her marriage robes were fitted on,
Her fair young face with blushes shone,
When the destroyer snatched her low,
And changed the lover's bliss to woe.

And these three listened to the song,
Silver-toned, and sweet, and strong,
Which that child, the living day,
Chanted to itself in play;
"When the wind blows the blossoms fall;
But a good God reigns over all."

The widow's lips impulsive moved;
The mother's grief, tho' unproved,
Softened, as her trembling tongue
Repeated what the infant sung;
And the old lover, with a start,
Cried it over in his heart.

And though the child—if child it were,
And not a seraph sitting there—
Was seen no more the sorrowing three
Went on their way resignedly,
The song still ringing in their ears—
Was it music of the spheres?

Who shall tell? They did not know,
But in the midst of deepest woe,
The strain returned when sorrow grew,
To warm them, and console them too—
"When the wind blows the blossoms fall;
But the good God reigns over all."

The Two Prayers.

Two hands upon the breast, and labor is past—
(Russian Proverb.)

"Two hands upon the breast
And labor is done;
Two pale feet crossed in rest,
The race is won.
Two eyes with coin-weights shut,
And all tears cease;
Two lips where grief is mute,
And wrath at peace.
So prey we oftentimes, mourning our lot;
God, in his kindness, answereth not.

"Two hands to work address,
Aye for his praise;
Two feet that never rest
Walking his ways.
Two eyes that look above,
Still, through all tears;
Two lips that breathe but love,
Never more fears."

So cry we afterwards, low at our knees;
Pardon these erring prayers! Father, hear these!

History of Life.

Day dawned. Within a curtained room,
Filled to a faintness with perfume,
A lady lay, at point of doom.

Day closed. A child has seen the light;
But for the lady fair and bright—
She rested in undreaming night.

Spring came. The lady's grave was green,
And near it oftentimes was seen
A gentle boy, with thoughtful mien.

Years fled. He wore a manly face,
And struggled in the world's rough race,
And won, at last, a lofty place.

And then he died. Behold before ya,
Humankind's brief sum and story—
Life, Death, and all there is of—Glory!

Anecdotes.

You flatter me, said a thin exquisite, to a young lady who was praising the beauty of his moustache.

For heaven's sake, ma'am, interposed an old skipper, don't make that monkey any flatter than he is now.

A drunken Dutchman by the name of Cain, staggering through the streets one day, was asked if he was the man that slew his brother?

No, said he, I was the one that got slewed.

How old are you? said a magistrate to a German arraigned before him.

I am dirty.
And how old is your wife?
Mine wife is dirty-two.

Then, sir, you are a very filthy couple, and I wish to have nothing further to do with either of you.

I repeat, said a person of questionable veracity, that I am an honest man.

Yes, was the reply, and how often will you repeat it before you believe it yourself?

Do you drink hale in America? asked a Cockney.

No, we drink thunder and lightning! said the Yankee.

SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting nor purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of disease—regulates the Bowels, removes all vitiated secretions, giving a healthy action to the Liver and a correct tone to the Stomach. It overcomes that feeling of Lassitude which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and renovates and restores the vital energy and Physical Strength.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofulous Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Brucitis, Asthma, Coughs, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever, Sores, White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Barber's Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eczema or Eruptions on the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying success, after every other known remedy has been tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effectual cure for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Costiveness and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness and Headache.

COMPLETE
Dental Establishment.
DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG,
SURGEON DENTISTS,
25 Tremont Street, (op stairs,) Boston.

Drs. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, are prepared to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a powerful agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as a saving in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is now, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystallized Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay and partially saved, but, when suitably restored, form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulvulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. It is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

THE RUINED MERCHANT.
—OR—
A Wife's Extravagance.
BY T. A. CONLEY, OF EASTON.

CHAPTER VIII.

At an early hour, Mr. Edmonds was in waiting at the humble abode of Herbert's residence in P— the conclusion did not have to Herbert expected the carriage, twelve, consequently was put into it as soon as it drove to the

Herbert was soon seated in beautiful drawing rooms of the mansion, where he was introduced Charles himself, to his wife, the young man, who saved his sister from a most horrible natural consequence, the subject of the catastrophe.

The merchant's wife was rich and silent whilst in the carriage, who felt very much embarrassed, for her cold looks and gray eyes were anything but reassuring you, reader.

Where is your sister, Elizabeth asked the merchant.

I do not know sir, replied C. She is in her room, I suppose. Edmonds. She does not feel well.

Al! my daughter, said the Herbert, was never the same since that awful catastrophe, before. Ever since that moment she looks sad, careworn and I cannot divine the cause of it.

I hope and trust sir, replied she is not hurt internally.

No; my family physician says she is not hurt internally, but why! here she is now, as breaking off rather abruptly, entered the room.

Allow me to introduce you, Mr. Edmonds, said Charles.

O! they have met before to said Mr. Edmonds, with a smile, nevolence on his manly face.

Miss Edmonds gave Herbert welcome, and sat down by the sofa, and there conversed freely and complimented him gallantly and heroic conduct lives were spared by a moral through him.

I really do not deserve and Herbert, for I did nothing worthy. It always gives me pleasure, to think, that God has put on earth to be a benefit to his creatures.

Miss Julia Simson mamma wishes to speak to ye.

Tell her to walk in, Dennis Edmonds.

Why, I am so glad to see you, son, said Mrs. Edmonds. Do how's your father, mother and brother.

They are all well, I thank Miss Simson.

Herbert had the honor of (if honor it may be called) to son.

open nature, his inward irritation, is immediately shown in bursts of passion. If you repress these ebullitions by scolding and punishment, you only increase the evil by changing passion into sulkeness. A cheerful, good-natured tone of your own, a sympathy with his trouble, whenever the trouble has arisen from no ill conduct on his part, are the best antidotes; but it would be better still to prevent beforehand, as much as possible, all sources of annoyance. Never fear spoiling children by making them too happy. Happiness is the atmosphere in which all good affections grow; the wholesome warmth necessary to make the heart-blood circulate healthily and freely; the chilling pressure which produces here an inflammation, there an excrescence, and, worst of all, "the mind's green and yellow sickness—ill temper."

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

TIGER ENGINE COMPANY. At the annual meeting of this company, held on Monday evening, May 3d, the following Officers were elected for the ensuing year, viz:—

Foreman, William Curtis.
First Assistant, William Wilson.
Second Assistant, Gilbert Baisdell.
Clerk and Treasurer, Edward A. Adams.
Section Foremen, Amos M. Lucibfield, Edward Brown, Francis Brown, Harrison O. Newcomb, Sylvanus Hunt, and John Dwellie.
Leading Foremen, H. A. C. Adams, Freeman Baisdell, George Turner, Stephen Penman, Franklin Curtis, and John W. Moore.
Standing Committee, William Parker, Jr., Thomas Newcomb and Thomas Curtis.

NOMINATION. George White, Esq., of this town has been nominated by the Governor to the Executive Council, for the office of Judge of Probate and Insolvency for this county.

RESIGNATION. At the conclusion of the criminal term of the Norfolk County Court of Common Pleas, at Dedham, recently held, District Attorney Keith announced his resignation of his office. During his official career fifteen hundred cases have been acted upon by him. His successor has not been appointed.

FIRE DEPARTMENT. The Selectmen having selected Edward A. Spear, Esq., S. Fellows, Wyman Abercrombie, Frederick A. Trask and Albert Hayden to serve as Engineers for the ensuing year, they met and organized by choosing Ensign S. Fellows, Chief, and Wyman Abercrombie, Clerk.

QUINCY MARINE RAILWAY. At a meeting of the subscribers to this stock, held on Thursday evening last, in the Niagara Engine House, it was Voted—To accept and adopt the report of a committee chosen at a former meeting to prepare rules, &c., for the government of the Company.

Voted—That when this meeting adjourns, it adjourns to Abercrombie's Hall, on Monday evening, May 17th, at 7 1/2 o'clock, for the choice of five Directors and such other business as may then come before them.

Voted—To adjourn.
Charles H. Edwards, Secretary.

THE MILITIA. The present Legislature has made several important changes in relation to the militia of our State. The volunteer companies are now allowed by law to have but two lieutenants; they have heretofore had four; so the chances for those who aspire to the wearing of gold epaulettes and holding a commission is narrowed down considerably.

The annual training on the last Wednesday of May has been abolished. The abolition of that old custom will probably save the State ten thousand dollars per year. One dollar and a half was the fee drawn by each member of the volunteer militia who appeared at his armory on the above day, "armed and equipped as the law directed."

GREAT HILL HOUSE. Mr. Meats, favorably known to our citizens as a substantial farmer, at Haugh's Neck, has removed to his new house at this location, which he has tastefully fitted up for the accommodation of social parties in search of a pleasant and agreeable watering place. Great Hill presents many attractions to the admirer of the beautiful and romantic. It has an extensive sea view, interspersed with many lovely islands, with Boston and Lynn seen lying in the distance. With but a short ride, over a smooth road, you are readily transported from our hot and dusty streets, to a cool and most invigorating sea-breeze.

A CURIOUS BREAK OF NATURE is related by the Hightown (N. C.) Excelsior in the shape of a log containing three different kinds of wood—white oak, maple and hickory—all grown together in the most perfect manner. The outside of the log had the appearance of white oak, and only after cutting off the end could the strange amalgamation be discovered.

A NEW TURNOUT. Mr. Belcher, long an assistant at the Old Colony Depot, has taken the team lately employed by Mr. Gay, the Depot Master, for the conveyance of passengers from and to the cars, which he intends running for the public generally, to any part of the town. Mr. B. is an experienced driver, has excellent accommodations, which will tend greatly to augment the pleasures and conveniences of the travelling community. We respectfully recommend him to the favorable notice of our citizens.

THE NEW RESTORATOR. Mr. Page, at his new quarters, at the Depot of the Old Colony Railroad, we are gratified to learn is progressing finely. The idea was a good one, and meets in every respect the wants of the travelling community. In addition to his other refreshments, confectionary of every description, with many of the tropical fruits—oysters will be served up in every conceivable style, and in a manner to tempt the appetite of the most fastidious epicure. An assortment, also, of the current literature of the day, may always be found, as pocket companions, to beguile a weary hour, on a long journey. Mr. P. and lady will always be present to attend to the wants and comforts of visitors.

CALIFORNIA NEWS. The Legislature of California has passed a bill prohibiting future emigration of free negroes to California, and requiring those already there to register their names and take out a license. There was great excitement among the negroes in consequence, and they had held their meetings and discussed the propriety of withdrawing from the State in a body to Vancouver's Island.

A BOY HANGING HIMSELF TO FRIGHTEN HIS PARENTS. In Middlesex, Yates County, (N. Y.) on Wednesday, of last week, John E. Francisco, aged about fifteen years, went out into a shed attached to his father's barn, and suspended himself by the neck with a rope. He had told some children who were with him to run into the house, as he was going to hang himself, and from this it is supposed that he did not intend really to commit suicide, but expected some one would come and release him. He was a very bright, active and intelligent boy, and for one so young, a perfect prodigy as to the amount of labor he performed, and the really valuable assistance he was constantly rendering to his parents. The father was nearly frantic with grief on finding his son dead, and declared repeatedly that he would not long survive him. His family kept watch over him, to see that he did not also put an end to his.

SHAD. Mr. Pell, of New York, in a recent lecture before the Farmer's Club, on the peculiarities of fish, thus describes the shad:

"They ascend our rivers from the 1st of April to the 10th of June, for the purpose of spawning, which they accomplish in the same manner that bass do, except that the male fails to cover the ova; this necessary operation is performed by the ebbing and flowing tide. The organization of this fish, says Mr. Pell, enables it to breathe either salt or fresh water, and, taking advantage of this fact, I have been enabled to breed them in ponds; and, from numerous experiments, am led to believe that shad live but a single year, and thus when they pass down our rivers after spawning, they are so weak and emaciated that they fall an easy prey to voracious fish. They take the circuit of the sea, commencing in the regions of the North Pole, in schools qualling in extent the whole of Great Britain and France. When they reach the coast of Georgia, they separate into immense squadrons, and as the season advances, run up all the rivers on our coast, followed a little later by the herring. The shad lives upon suction, and feeds upon the animalcules in the water while swimming. Food has never been discovered in the body of a shad when opened, and they never bite a baited hook."

SHOCKING ACCIDENT. On Saturday afternoon last, as two lads were gunning in the woods west of the Pittsfield Cemetery, one of them, Charles Y. Swift, springing to a seat on a stump, brought the butt of his gun to the ground with sufficient force to explode the percussion cap. The muzzle being within a few inches of his face, the whole contents of the gun, (one hundred small shot) were driven through the roof of the mouth, carrying with them into the brain the upper teeth and portions of the bone, leaving a cavity large enough to admit of probing with the finger to the base of the brain. Swift lingered until afternoon. He was sixteen years old, and was the son of Charles H. Swift, a commission merchant of Sacramento city, California. At the moment when the accident occurred, the aunt with whom Charles resided in Pittsfield, received a letter from his mother, announcing her arrival at New Orleans in the last California steamer, and her expectations of reaching Pittsfield on Thursday, to take home her son and two daughters, who have been receiving their education at the same place.

[From the Puritan Recorder—April 29th.]
Ecclesiastical Council at Quincy.

The dissolution of the pastoral relation between Rev. Nelson Clark, and the Evangelical Congregational Church in Quincy, was recommended by a mutual Pastoral and Church Council, on the 21st of April. The action of the Council does not affect, in any way, Mr. Clark's relations to the parish. After voting "that the Council are satisfied with the regularity of the action by which this Council is convened," and advising the dissolution of the pastoral relation of Mr. Clark to the Church, the Council adopted the following

RESULT:
The Council regret deeply the circumstances that lead them to believe this action to be for the highest good of the parties and for the cause of Christ. They cordially sympathize with the Church in this separation, and with Rev. Mr. Clark, in the various trials he has here experienced, and cordially commend him as an able and faithful minister of the Gospel.

The recruiting officers of this village last week visited the various sections of the town and were successful in enrolling about three hundred able bodied fighters of the "Canine species;" who are armed to the teeth, and stand ready for patriotic duty. We hope the malady that has come among them since their enrollment will not exterminate this valiant army. So far it has proved quite fatal, and the disease seems to be a poisonous character. Bounty one dollar per head. We have not learnt whether the Government have accepted them or not! probably the next telegram will decide the question.

JIM LANE'S MEN TURNED ROBBERS IN KANSAS. A correspondent of a mercantile house at St. Louis, of the 25th of April, writes that the "difficulties here are far worse than they have been. On the 21st, a party of Lane's men commenced robbing the citizens on the Maranion river, only eight miles above our town, driving off their cattle, entering their houses, in open daylight, and taking every species of property of value. They were pursued by a company of United States troops, under Capt. Anderson, overtaken, and property to the amount of one thousand dollars recovered. In the skirmish, one man was killed, Capt. Anderson having his horse killed under him, and receiving a slight flesh wound in the leg.

Quincy, April 3 1f

This importation was soon succeeded by fresh animals under De Soto and like adventures. In the colonial periods of our history English animals were imported. The result has been, from the blending of races, to produce an American horse, whose superiority over the English for general purposes, is thus described by Mr. Herbert:

"One point in which the American horse differs extremely, and here, most advantageously from the European animal is his greater surefootedness and freedom from the dangerous and detestable vice of stumbling. It is only necessary, in order to convince himself that this is a real and not an imaginary difference in favor of our horses, to examine the knees of the back horses let for hire, either in the cities or rural districts of the United States, as compared with those of similar English lineages.

In this country a broken knee is one of the rarest blemishes, if not the very rarest, even encounters in the horse. Of horses let for hire in England, unless it be by a few hack livery-keepers in London, in the Universities, and in one or two other of the most important towns in hunting neighborhoods, a majority are decidedly broken-kneed. Not so it is usual to meet perilsous stumblers, even from gentlemen's stables, and in the case of animals whose appearance would indicate anything but liability to so manifest and disqualifying a fault. I have had in my life several heavy falls on the road in England, from my horse coming down with me on a trot, when, from the character of the horse, I should have expected anything else; and it is needless to add that the roads in Great Britain, as a general thing, are infinitely better, freer from ruts, stones, and other obstacles, than those of the United States; while, in this country, I have never had a horse stumble with me in harness, and but twice under the saddle, one of which was easily recovered, while the other, which fell outright, was a notorious blunderer, and, I think, the only broken-kneed horse I have met in America."

The writer from whom the above quotation is made, refers to the extreme good temper and docility of the American variety, as compared with the English, and concludes that the general horse of America is superior, "not in blood or in beauty, but decidedly in hardiness to do and endure, in powers of travel, in speed, docility and good temper, to any other race of general horses in the known world."—Boston Transcript.

Mr. White is quite young for so important an office, but he possesses excellent talents, and in other respects is well qualified.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY. The Lynn Bay State and the Taunton Democrat ask this question—"Shall we have a Democratic party in Massachusetts?" and truthfully remark that "it is time for our brethren throughout the Commonwealth to cease to make war upon one another, and take some thought for the welfare and success of principles." We know men, calling themselves democrats, who care not a farthing about principles, but go for the "loaves and fishes." At a proper time, we may enlarge on this subject.

LIQUOR AGENT. We learn that Mr. Geo. Vessey, 2d, has been appointed by the Selectmen of this town, Agent for the sale of Spirituous Liquors under the existing laws, and comes into office on the 20th inst. We understand the place of sale will be on his premises, in Mechanic Street.

A MONSTER SEAL. A Seal weighing four hundred pounds, was discovered, on Monday last, on the flats just below the toll bridge, at Weymouth Landing, by Mr. J. Loring, who, with others, succeeded in capturing his sealship and bringing him safely to shore. So unusual a visitor created no little excitement in the community, hundreds visiting the spot during the day. The body will furnish twenty gallons of oil.

ASSOCIATION. In Randolph, at a meeting of the bootmakers held at Conant's Hall, April 24th a Lodge was organized that now numbers upwards of one hundred members. In the east part of the town there are two Lodges. The Boston Herald is informed that this combination of bootmakers for the protection of their labor, extends through all the south-eastern portion of Massachusetts. There are upwards of three thousand in the league, and ere long, a strike is promised that will make the manufacturer quake.

We received a note this morning from our friend Gay, and are pleased to learn that he is slowly recovering from a long and stubborn disease.

The First Church in Boston, and the First Church in Quincy.

The relation existing between these churches is of singular interest; the oldest, established in King (now State) street, in 1630, sent off this "branch for the convenience of the inhabitants of the town of Boston residing at Mount Wollaston," (now Quincy,) in 1636, and from that time to the present day they have continued the intimacy, by friendship and exchange of ministers, deacons, and people—many of the worshippers attending each, as the seasons change; and the "love passing that of women," which existed between the late Dr. Lunt and the surviving Dr. Frothingham, is continued by a still closer connection of their descendants.

Under these circumstances, it was fitting that the Ex Pastor of the First Church in Boston should weave to the memory of his friend that matchless wreath which will bloom perpetually on the monument just erected in his still vacant church; and the society are now again indebted to the same hand (and heart) for an inscription on the tablet of Dr. Lunt's predecessor and colleague, which reads as follows:

In Memory of
REV. PETER WHITNEY.

Born in Northborough Jan. XIX, MDCCXXV. of Clerical Descent and Dispositions, he became the Minister of this town at the commencement of the passing century; serving in his office till old age, steadily, gravely, kindly.

During his ministry these walls were built, and within them he continued to appear till by a sudden malady and in an instant of time he ceased to be mortal.
March 11, MDCCCLXIII.

"The Reapers are the Angels."

The monument of which the above is the inscription, was executed at the "Quincy Marble Works," by Messrs. McGrath & Mitchell, in the highest style of finish. Beneath the tablet are richly sculptured palm; above it, a figure of a life ripened in the service of the Master; and surmounting all is a crown of oak and laurel—the whole forming a just tribute to one of that class of ministers of the old school, whose examples we fear are not sufficiently followed in these days. Within it, is secured a manuscript of which the following is a copy.

The advanced are the names of those who have caused this monument to be erected to their beloved

PASTOR, TEACHER, FRIEND.

TRIAL JUSTICE. John Quincy Adams, Esq. of this town, son of the Hon. Charles Francis Adams has been confirmed as Judge to hear and determine all criminal cases which may occur in this place. He will assume the duties of his office on the first of July ensuing. This is a good appointment and gives entire satisfaction.

Among the other selections for Trial Justices, in several of the towns in Norfolk County, we notice the following, viz:—James Humphrey of Weymouth, Samuel B. Noyes of Canton, Erasm Worthington of Dedham, and Charles M. S. Churchill of Milton.

SOUTH AMERICA. A sanguinary battle took place at Arequipa, Peru, on the 7th of March, between the government forces under Castilla, and the revolutionists, headed by Vivanco. The latter was defeated, and had escaped to Bolivia. Arequipa was stormed by Castilla. The battle is said to have been terrific. Of one battalion of six hundred men which defended the barricades, all but forty were killed. The loss on both sides was over two thousand killed.

HOWLAND AND KNIGHT'S DRAMATIC COMPANY. Report speaks highly favorable of this new company. It holds an enviable rank in the dramatic world, for talent, respectability, and a thorough knowledge of their profession. Mr. Knight, the junior manager, is not unknown to our community. He was one of the most pleasing and successful actors in Marston & Co's troupe. The Niagara boys will be there on Monday evening next.

Don't forget Loring. His Chowder will be ready at 11 o'clock, this day.

For the Patriot.

Sudden Death.

A beautiful draft horse, the property of Mr. Thomas Nightingale, and drove by Mr. Reed, came to a premature death, on Wednesday last. On the morning of that day, he was, apparently, as well as usual. He had been seen passing up and down Washington street, a number of times, but on the return of his last trip, he suddenly fell in the harness, and shortly after expired without a groan. The best of medical advice was at hand, but nothing could save him; his last moments had come. A Post Mortem examination was held, and the decision, was, that his death proceeded from a disease of the heart. The body was handed over to Mr. —, for dissection, who carefully separated the outside-side covering from the body—the residue we presume is to be made up into sausages and meat puddings. POINT

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Richmond Enquirer publishes the terms of negotiation between Mr. John A. Washington, the proprietor of Mount Vernon, and the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association of the Union. They are, the payment of two hundred thousand dollars for two hundred acres of land, in which are included Washington's residence and tomb and landing place. Eighteen thousand dollars of this sum were paid on the closing of the contract and the remainder of the contract price is to be paid in four yearly instalments.

An immense activity reigns in the maritime ports of France, and no nation of the world is increasing its naval strength at the present moment with the same rapidity as that country. Its army now numbers six hundred and twenty thousand men; its navy is very powerful, and will soon perhaps be quite equal to that of England.

The Mayor of New York City, estimates the amount of official from the public till of that city, within a few years, at $8,000,000.

Chief Justice Shaw, of this State, has given a decision to the effect that in accordance with the Nuisance Act, any one is at liberty to destroy intoxicating liquors with the vessels in which they are contained, if the same are kept illegally for sale.

The jury of inquest upon the late disaster on the New York Central railroad, have decided that the deaths were caused by culpable neglect on the part of the Central railroad Company, in not causing the bridge to be properly examined.

There is a man in Cincinnati, Ohio, who has four short fingers on each hand, reaching about to the first joint of usual length; and the Gazette says that this physical deformity of the hand can be traced back through various members of the family for a period of one hundred and eighty years.

The Committee of the Executive Council on pardons have reported against commuting the sentence of McGee, the State Prison murderer, and recommended the 25th of June as the day of his execution. Gov. Banks has accordingly issued the warrant.

The amount of specie in the banks of New York and Boston, at this time, exceeds forty five millions of dollars.

A little child only twenty-one months old fell into a post hole, head first, and there remained from ten o'clock in the morning till six o'clock in the evening. It was then discovered by its anxious mother coiled up at the bottom of the hole, with a shawl over its body, and when taken out was completely chilled and almost lifeless.

A sad death occurred recently at Northfield (Vt.) in the loss of a little girl. She was playfully talking to her shadow in the depths of a tub of water when the cover blew over, and held her face in the water until the little unfortunate was drowned.

A man who lived near Galena, (Ill.) carried a load of potatoes to that place. The highest offer he got was ten cents a bushel, and rather than sell them at that rate, he tipped them into the river. The result was that he thus obstructed navigation and was fined.

The work at Hoosac Tunnel is now vigorously prosecuted, and full gangs of workmen are engaged on both sides of the mountain.

The old project for the formation of a new State from portions of Tennessee, Virginia, and North Carolina, has been revived.

It is worth printing that Rev. H. W. Lord, of Montpelier, Vermont, who now receives fifteen hundred dollars per annum has declined a four thousand dollar call at Cincinnati.

The New York Tribune notices the curious fact that Judge Shaw, who gave the late damaging decision by which grog-shops are outlawed, is the same Judge, who, in the outset of the temperance reform, held Dr. Cheever guilty of libel for writing his satirical dream about Deacon Giles' Distillery. Times have changed since then.

DR. S. STOPPING, DENTAL SURGEON

No. 19 Tremont Row, (upstairs),

Directly opposite the head of Brattle Street, BOSTON.

CONTINUES to perform all operations on the teeth, such as filling, setting, cleansing, regulating, and extracting, on such terms as make his services accessible to all. Having carefully selected, from the great mass of what are called modern improvements in Dentistry, whatever is of real value; and combining such improvements with the experience of more than twenty-five years of close application to the duties of the profession he may be permitted to say that whatever pertains to the dental profession, whether mechanical or surgical, he is fully competent to perform. To do justice, and give satisfaction in all cases that come under the supervision of the dentist, though often attended with some difficulty, should be the aim and study of all who assume the responsibility of the care of the teeth; and the failure of so many in accomplishing what they promise, though honest, in their intentions, and uniting in their efforts, must be attributed, either to their ignorance of the principle upon which dental operations are based, or to the want of experience and ingenuity to apply them. Take, for instance, the nice operation of plugging a tooth—a process of great apparent simplicity, yet it is the most difficult of execution, and important in its consequences, of any within the range of operative dentistry. So true is this, that not more than one in twenty who belong to the profession, are qualified to fill a tooth. And so too, with setting teeth, especially whole and half sets, where correct taste and sound judgment are required in combination with skill in mechanism. There is, however, still another item connected in the qualifications and services of the dentist, of paramount importance, which is called for at the present day, in administering ether for the removal of teeth. The natural teeth may be imperfectly filled, and even ruined—artificial ones may be badly set, and fail to answer the purpose for which they were made—but neither life nor health is thereby endangered. Not so in the administration of ether. It is an agent that should be confined to the care and control of intelligent men, who have learned its peculiarities and effects on the human system. The use of a sponge or cloth in its administration, though a little more convenient for the administrator, is not, by any means, the best medium. Ether should be so administered as to prevent the air from entering the lungs at a second time. The reason for this has its foundation in the laws of chemical combination in the process of respiration. The natural consequence of inhaling ether over and over again, from a sponge held over the mouth and nose, is to produce more or less of nausea, vomiting, and faintness, if nothing worse, during etherization, with a distressing headache, faintness, and extreme lassitude, for many hours after. All these effects, however, are almost entirely obviated by the INHALING APPARATUS, used by Dr. Storking, who gives especial attention to the administration of ether for the removal of teeth, preparatory to the setting of whole and half sets.

WOLFE'S CELEBRATED
Schedid Aromatic Schnapps.

THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured
by the proprietor, at Schedid, Holland,
expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own Factory. It is pure Tincture
of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose more
valuable extract is distilled and rectified with
its spirituous solvent, which thus becomes a
concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and
aroma, altogether transcending in its cordial
and medicinal properties to any alcoholic
stimulant now made in the world. It is now
prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in
the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout,
Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints.

Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases
of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen
pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

UDOLPHO WOLFE,
Sole Manufacturer and Importer,
Depot 22 Broadway St., New York.

Poetry.

Lines

To the bereaved parents, brother and sisters
of the deceased John Felton, Jr., who died Dec.
1st, 1857, aged 20 years, 1 month and 10 days.

BY SELLIE FRANCES MERRITT.

Fond parents, dry those pearly tears,
That glisten in your eyes;
That cherished one, for whom you weep,
Now lives beyond the skies.

This earth was far too bleak a place,
For such a fragile flower;
And God, in mercy, called him home,
To deck a fairer bowler.

Oh! lovely brother, cheer your heart,
With thoughts which say 'tis best,
That one so gentle should depart,
And find eternal rest.

Oh! sisters dear, though you've bid farewell
To a brother loved by all,
You soon will meet him in that world,
Where Jesus summons all.

And all the dear remaining friends,
That feel a heavy heart,
Let Heaven's sweet will affirm your minds:
'Twas best that you should part.

His summons came as youth's clear morn
Was mixed with manhood's brighter day;
When pruned hopes began to dawn,
And noblest aims direct his way.

Sweet Virtue dwelt within his mind,
And made him dear to many hearts;
Well has he won the love that twined,
And now the saddened brow imparts.

But he has gone—Love could not bid
Death on his solemn mission stay;
And closed now is his coffin lid,
And dust to dust is borne away.

Oh! may his early summons tend
To lead each friend who waits below,
Now on their Saviour to depend,
And like him, be prepared to go.

Virtue.

Sweet day! so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bride of the earth and sky,
The dew shall weep thy fall to-night;
For thou must die.

Sweet rose! whose hue, angry and brave,
Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye,
Thy root is ever in its grave;
And thou must die.

Sweet spring! full of sweet days and roses,
A box where sweets compacted lie,
My music shows ye have your closes,
And all must die.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like a season'd timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives.

Conscientious Discharge of Duty.

Yet nerve thy spirit to the proof,
And blench not at thy chosen lot;
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown—yet faint thou not,
Nor heed the shaft too surely cast.

The foul and hissing bolt of scorn;
For with thy side shall dwell, at last,
The victory of endurance born.
Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among her worshippers.

Anecdotes.

Mary, my love, do you remember the text
this morning?
No, papa, I never can remember the text,
I've such a bad memory.

Mary, said her mother, did you notice Susan Brown?

O yes! What a fright! She had on her last year's bonnet, done up, a pea-green silk,
a black lace mantilla, brown gaiters, an imitation of Horatio collar, a lava bracelet, her old ear drops, a such fan! O, my!

Well, my dear, said the mother, your memory is improving.

A lazy fellow declared in public that he could not find bread enough for his family.
Nor I, replied an industrious mechanic,
I am obliged to work for it.

A young lady asked a gentleman the meaning of the word surrogate.
It is, said he, a gate through which parties
pass on their way to get married.

Then, I suppose, replied she, that it is a corruption of sorrow gate.
You are right, miss, as woman is an abbreviation of wo to man.

Now, spose you was to be turned into an animal, said Jim, what would you like to be, Bill?

O, I would like to be a lion, replied Bill,
because he's so—
Oh, no! don't be a lion Bill, interrupted little Tom, who has had some recent painful experience at school, be a wasp, and then you can sting the schoolmaster.

Pray, Jack, why did you marry such a little wife?

Why, said he, I thought you would have known that of all evils we should choose the LEAST.

As you do not belong to my parish, said a clergyman to a beggar sailor with a wooden leg, you cannot expect that I should relieve you.
Sir, said the sailor, with a noble air, I lost
my leg fighting for all parishes.

Pure Potash

IS FOR SALE.

B. T. BABBITT,

68 & 70 Washington street, N. Y.,

And 35 India street, Boston.

THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years been the necessity of having

some reliable standard for the strength of POT-

ASH. The adulteration has become so general,

that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, gone nearly out of use. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of subduing his name

to every package, and warrants the strength to be uniform, and when used always producing the same results. Potash many times is adulterated

with salt, which is destructive in making soap;

it makes the Ladies say they did not have good luck, &c. One other reason that Potash has gone out of use, is, it is so unpleasant to handle,

being put in wooden casks, and becoming a liquid

in many cases, and very troublesome to the retailer.

Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potashes,

always being the same strength, and producing

the same results; and will warrant it in all cases,

if the directions are followed, to produce double the effect in making soaps, and all other purposes for which Potash is used, with full directions for making the best of Soft, Hard, or Fancies Soaps. It is made with little trouble; the ley

is all prepared in five or ten minutes.

1 lb. Potash warranted to cut 5 lbs. of grease into good soap.

12 lbs. will make one barrel of beautiful soap.

Directions for making soft soap.

Directions for making hard soap.

Directions for Laundries and Hotels.

Directions for cleaning cotton waste, that has been used for cleaning machinery of all kinds.

Directions for using this Potash in place of Salt Soda.

Directions for sticking India-rubber soles on Shoes.

All the above directions accompany the can.

BEST SALEBRATUS,

is prepared entirely different from other salebratus. All the deleterious matter extracted in such a manner as to produce Bread, Biscuit, and

all kinds of Cakes, without containing a particle

of saleratus when the bread or cake is baked;

thereby producing wholesome results. Every particle of Saleratus is mixed to Gas and passes

through the bread or biscuit while baking, completely nothing remains but Common Salt, Water

and Flour. You will readily perceive by the

taste of this Saleratus that it is entirely different

from other Saleratus. When you purchase one

package you should take the old paper with you, and

be very particular and get the next exactly like

the first, (name and picture, twisted Lead-bread,

with a glass effervescing water on the top, as you see in the bill.)

Full directions for making Bread with Sour

Milk and Cream Tartar, without containing a particle of Saleratus; also, directions for making Soda Water; also, directions for making Seidlitz Powders, will accompany each package.

Dental Establishment.
DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG,
SURGEON DENTISTS,
25 Tremont Street, (opposite,) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a bounding agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain, and with the certainty of extracting teeth in less than two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases, of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, to be effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crysta Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay and partially saved, but eventually restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulvulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

CHAPTER IX.

Why, brother, where have you and Mr. Ulrich been all this time? asked the sweet and innocent Elizabeth, casting a look of recognition at Herbert.

We were in the library with father talking about painting, war, bravery, drawing men, and deeds of heroism, responded Charles, who took a seat on the sofa by his sister's side, and at the same time casting a glance sideways at Herbert who sat in the big rocking chair near the window.

Your conversation must have been very interesting, remarked Elizabeth, and I'm sure I'd like to have heard it, were it not for the sudden appearance of Miss Simson. She has been here all the time since you and Mr. Ulrich left the drawing-room, until within the last ten minutes.

I wish she would make us fewer visits, and also make them short as possible. That is what I wish, sister.

But you do not mean it! I'm sure, brother! was the quick reply, for she comes here to see you, occasionally.

Well, but your brother does not want to see her as often as you may imagine, was Charles's reply.

Lovers will quarrel, eh! Mr. Ulrich? said Elizabeth, trying with all her playfulness to ruffle the good temper of her brother.

Not being familiar with what people call love, responded Herbert, I am sorry, Miss Edmonds that I cannot give you any information.

Oh! my sister judges me by herself, Mr. Ulrich. She has been sad and melancholy for weeks and weeks, and I, as her doctor, think that it must be a disease of the heart!

And I believe I am very near right too, in thinking so. Am I not, sister?

Why! you are really very provoking, Charles, replied his sister, whose face by this time was suffused with sweet blushes. You are a real plaguesetter, and I'll expose your antics before Mr. Ulrich, and then you will have wished that you had let me alone.

Well, proceed, sister, before dinner. It will give us all a good appetite, I dare say, joyously remarked Charles. But remember, sister, that you must grant me the same privilege that I grant you. I have a few words to say about Miss Julia Simson's brother Edward who called here so often when I was in College. Ha, ha, ha! sister, have I made you blush again? There now, you see, Mr. Ulrich, who is the greatest lover, my sister or me.

Dinner is served, Miss Elizabeth, said Dennis as he entered the drawing-room door.

Well, I'm glad of it, Dennis, replied Miss Elizabeth.

Come Mr. Ulrich, said Charles; come let us have some dinner for I feel real hungry and I'm sure that judging you by myself, you must be very hungry too. So come along and we shall resume this love topic, by-and-by. Eh, sister?

You can spare yourself the trouble, Charles, retorted his sister.

O very well; just as you say sister. You know that I've gained the victory, and in order to satisfy you still more, I will leave it to our umpire, Mr. Ulrich, and—

Dinner will be cold, Miss Elizabeth, said Dennis as he entered the drawing-room a second time. The dinner will be spoiled, sure.

Where are father and mother, Dennis. They are in the dining-room waiting for ye's, Miss, and they are wondering what's keeping ye's so long.

Well, run and tell them we are coming, Dennis, said Elizabeth and turning laughingly to her brother and Mr. Ulrich she continued—O! this is all your fault, Charles, so come along, and never let me here you speak again about love.

Poor Herbert wished a hundred times that he was seated at his mother's humble table, instead of the rich and heavy laden table of his friend, Mr. Edmonds. It was the first time in his life that he sat down at the table of the rich, and his feelings can better be imagined than described.

The dinner was fit for an emperor, but Herbert could find more ease and happiness by being seated at his mother's humble table, where he could be free from restraint and enjoy the company of his mother and sister.

Not that he felt so much embarrassed in the company of Mr. Edmonds, his son or daughter, but the cold and stiff manners of Mrs. Edmonds chilled him to the heart, and he longed to be free from her.

The whole family, excepting Mrs. Edmonds, were very sociable to Herbert, and talked and laughed freely while at dinner. But the face of the merchant's wife was as stern as marble, and her remarks during dinner were very few and select. Indeed, she did not like the idea of having the same of dining with a poor clerk, whom (as she once said herself) nobody knew.

But if Mr. Edward Simson or his sister had occupied Herbert's chair at the table, then, indeed, would she put on her best smiles and graces. But, no, their guest was only a poor clerk—that was all.

That was all, did I say? No, kind reader, not all. He was mainly, honest, educated, honorable, brave and ambitious. He was, also, modest, timid, and rather awkward in the company of those who are generally called the aristocracy of our land.

But he loved to be alone—loved to be in his "garret studio," where he could commune with his own heart-thoughts, and be free from the eye of the world.

In the language of Mr. Edmonds he possessed genius of a very high order, but, like many other poor students, he had not the means to turn that genius which God lavished upon him so bountifully to good account. His greatest ambition was to leave a name for future posterity. Oh! could I but become a great painter! he used to say to his mother and sister; I would willingly die in a hovel in the midst of poverty and rage, but, alas! I fear my wish cannot be realized. Ah me! ah me!

Often indeed would his poor mother encourage and cheer him; and also, his good, kind sister; but still his hours of gloom and sadness would steal upon him, which caused him to be at times sad, cheerless and careworn. While in those dark moods he would look up to Heaven and exclaim: Oh! how I wish I were up—there, with my dear father, brothers and sisters.

Reader let us take another look at the group that sat around the merchant's table. There is the plain free-hearted Mr. Edmonds picking a tender chicken to which he holds between his fingers, which shocks his wife's sense of etiquette. And on his right sits Miss Elizabeth and her mother eating custards and jellies, and directly opposite the ladies sits Charles and Herbert toying with some nuts and sweet oranges; while the ever-faithful Dennis is standing directly back of his old master and diligently attending to his duty but looking now and again at Herbert Ulrich of whom he had heard so much deserved and flattering praise.

Shall I help you to some of the custards? said Dennis to his master.

Not any, thank you, politely remarked the merchant.

Would you have some of the pudding, jellies, oranges or nuts, sir? asked Dennis a second time. They are very nice.

Nothing more, I thank you, Dennis, replied Mr. Edmonds, but you can help Mr. Ulrich and Charles to some. I never care for a desert.

I hope you will excuse me said Mrs. Edmonds rising from the table rather unexpectedly, I feel rather unwell and I must retire to my room.

You are quite excusable, madam, answered Herbert.

Shortly after the departure of Mrs. Edmonds from the dining room, the whole company returned to the drawing room and commenced in light conversation about divers subjects. Herbert was pretty well read in history, arts and sciences, considering the limited period he had to devote to them; and when he would get thoroughly warmed up in his subject he was really interesting, witty and eloquent.

Is dinner over Dennis? said Mary, as she stole noiselessly into the dining room.

Be dad it is, Mary, replied Dennis, and now I believe it'll be our turn, for it's myself that feels as hungry as a stove pipe.

Well, hurry and eat, said Mary, for John has been waiting for you this long time.

O tell him to drive away an' not wait for me, responded Dennis; and as soon as he got through, tell him he must harness the horses and drive Mr., what's-his-name, Ulrich, home.

Won't he stay to tea, Dennis?

No, he won't; indeed I wish he would; but master told me awhile ago that he invited him to tea, and so did Miss Elizabeth and master Charles too, but he refused them all.

How do you like him Dennis?

In truth, Mary, I like him as well as a duck likes water, and that's saying a great deal.

Is he handsome and tall? I have not seen him yet said Mary; but I shall see him before he leaves, I'll warrant you.

He is not very handsome or tall, replied Dennis approaching closer to Mary's side. But he's what I call purty good lookin', and tall enough to be smart as a young Count.

He has a great big theven on his face where he was cut that night he stopped master's horses, an' it's not well yet I suppose. May I never be hanged exclaimed Dennis, but here I've been talkin' to ye all this blessed time an' I never thought to kiss ye, and before Mary could escape from the room, Dennis made her pay for the valuable news he imparted to his sweetheart, for, such they were, in truth, as the reader will see and judge for himself ere long.

When Dennis went down stairs to his dinner, and here let me remark that Mary had it smelking hot for him.) Mary asked him where the mistress was.

Be gorry! ejaculated Dennis, I thought I heard her say she was sick, a little while ago. Sick! did you say? Why, you are joking, I'm sure you are. Why, I saw her go in to dinner with her husband.

I know all that, said Dennis, but you see she got sick after dinner not before it.

O! then she's had her dinner?

Yes, yes, never believe that same Mary. And if it was yourself that had so much in your stomach as she has at the present time, be me soul, but it's yourself that would be as I was when I had the bizzard moccasins; and that was sick enough I can tell ye.

O Dennis, if she had heard you now, would you not catch it. I know you would.

D—! a hair I care; she knows I'm just as independent as a horse without ears, or a dog without a tail; and if she doesn't like Dennis O'Brien, all she's got to do, is to tell me to start me duds an' march, as the soldiers say in Ireland.

Why Dennis, how you talk. I'm sure you wouldn't like to leave Mr. Edmonds, Master Charles and Miss Elizabeth, after being with them so long, would you?

O may I die an old maid, Mary! but you are right, I never thought of that. Yes, an' there's one more ye forgot to mention that I wouldn't leave behind for the world.

O! I know, said Mary laughingly; you mean—mean John Long the coachman.

No, I don't mean John Long or Long John either, but I mean you, ye rogue o' the world ye.

Me, did you say Dennis? You are dreaming, or crazy; or else you are trying to plague me.

Be the hole o' me coat but I mean what I say, an' ye may call it whatever ye please, so ye may.

Dennis had his likes and dislikes as well as everybody else, and indeed the reader must not blame him for he never had spoken thus of his mistress before, nor would he then were it not that he was talking to his confidential friend, to whom he could confide anything.

If ever Mrs. Edmonds could very seldom, if ever, agree upon little trifling matters.

It was the firm conviction of the old servant that if a lady was really sick, she could not eat a very hearty meal, as his mistress had done in his presence. He knew very well that she made that as an excuse to get away from one, who a few months before risked his life to save her from Death's cold hands. But what cared she now for such conduct? Nothing. She possessed a very remote idea of such a thing occurring, but no more.

Let us now walk into the drawing room, reader, and listen to those sweet, soft streams of music from the piano-forte of Miss Edmonds. Hark! she sings some mournful songs. What is it? Ah! 'tis "Washington's Grave." Delightfully sad and soul inspiring is it. Observe how it causes the tears to spring from the sympathizing heart of the merchant, who sits in his old arm chair, close to the piano-forte. And notice Herbert and Charles as they sit on the sofa, in deep meditation as though they were sitting in the quiet and revered shades of Mount Vernon.

That is my favorite song Mr. Herbert, said

the merchant as his daughter turned round to her guest.

I am not at all surprised that it is, sir, replied Herbert. I thought that I had often heard it sung, but never did I hear it sung until now.

You are quite flattering, Mr. Ulrich, replied Elizabeth, with a smile and blush depicted on her fine expressive face.

The poor compliment is indeed deserved, responded Herbert.

You are both highly complimentary, added the merchant, as he rose from his chair and walked towards the door. Well, I'll leave for a few minutes, continued he, and now my daughter you must sing to Herbert his favorite song; thus saying the merchant went up stairs to see how his wife was getting along. But to his surprise he found her lying upon the lounge reading a favorite volume, entitled "Religious Progress in India."

Come tell us the name of your favorite song, said Charles, laying his hand on Herbert's shoulder. You must be quick for sister is waiting to sing and play it for you.

Why, brother! you are really provoking, answered Elizabeth with a sly look from her starlit eyes.

Really Mr. Edmonds, timidly remarked Herbert, I don't know as I have any favorite song unless it is "My Boyhood's Mountain Home."

A beautiful title truly, remarked Charles, as he advanced towards his sister to see if it could not be found among her huge pile of rare music.

That is my favorite song, too, said Elizabeth as she turned over sheet after sheet of music. Oh! it is really a beautiful composition. The words are so sweet and pathetic that I can never sing it without thinking of the author.

What's the author's name, sister?

I cannot remember it now, said Elizabeth, but I'll tell you as soon as I can find it. It ought to be in this—here it is, brother.

It is—it is a namesake of yours, as I live! exclaimed Charles turning to Herbert.

Herbert blushed and turned his face in another direction for he was not aware that the song was in the possession of Miss Elizabeth.

Perhaps you are the author yourself, remarked Miss Edmonds. Are you not?

Herbert saw immediately that he could not evade the question put to him by the fair Elizabeth, and was forced to confess.

The words are mine, or composed by me, said Herbert, but they were put to music by a sister of mine whilst at the Academy of B— in Maine.

By your sister? exclaimed Charles in a tone of surprise.

Yes, sir, was Herbert's reply.

Does your sister reside in this city? asked Miss Edmonds.

She does? replied Herbert.

I did not see her at your house, said Elizabeth when my father and I called upon you to reward you for your valor on a certain occasion.

She used to teach music some time ago, but now she acts as book-keeper and saleswoman with a Mr. Little.

Well, I'll make it my business to pay her a visit sometime next week, kindly remarked Elizabeth; and you will oblige me very much if you will be kind enough when you see her to acquaint her of my intention.

And I shall accompany you, sister, humorously remarked Charles; and then we can see our friend's little studio, which he told father and me of in the library a while ago.

Then it appears that our guest is a painter as well as a poet. I'm sure that if his paintings are as good as his poetical compositions, they must indeed be beautiful and—

Can compare with yours, sister, interrupted Charles.

What's the matter daughter? said the merchant as he entered the drawing room. I thought I told you to sing a song for our young friend, Mr. Ulrich, and it seems you have forgotten all about it. Come now, my dear, I insist upon you singing the song, immediately.

We were waiting for you father, said the happy daughter as she seated herself before the piano-forte.

Ha, ha! A good excuse, certainly, laughingly replied her father, as he took his seat by her side.

It's a fact! replied Charles. We've caught our friend very nice. I'll tell you all about it by-and-by, and now you will hear the favorite song, written by our hero and set to music by his sister. See, father! here it is. Ha, ha, ha! He didn't like to confess it, but we made him, though, own up to it. He was not aware that Elizabeth had the music. If he had, he would, no doubt, have named something else.

Why Charles, exclaimed Elizabeth, if you keep talking so, I cannot sing.

Well then, go on, go on; I will not speak, no, not another word until you have finished.

That is my favorite song Mr. Herbert, said

Elizabeth then touched the ivory keys of her favorite instrument, and held the auditors spell-bound during the execution of the favorite song.

Capital! Capital! exclaimed the merchant. I want to hear you sing it again, my dear; I think it's really beautiful.

Elizabeth commenced the song again which was listened to with the greatest attention throughout.

The carriage is ready, sir, said Dennis as he entered the drawing-room just as the last soft strain of Miss Edmonds' voice died away like the gentle zephyrs in the silent forest.

Really it's too bad, said the merchant, that you are going to leave us so soon, but you must, I insist upon it, repeat your visits often. I've something private to communicate to you next week, but I shall call at your house and see you ere then.

It will always afford me the greatest of pleasure Mr. Edmonds, replied Herbert, making one of his curious but meaning bows.

Will you have any objection of my accompanying you? asked Charles, as he stepped into the carriage after his friend.

None whatever, sir, was Herbert's response. But I fear I'm putting you to too much trouble and inconvenience.

Don't mention it my dear sir, said Charles, at the same time giving orders to the coachman to drive on.

Charles left his friend at the door of his humble dwelling, which contrasted strangely with the splendid mansion he had just left.

Will you not walk in for a few minutes? asked Herbert, addressing his young friend who still sat in his father's carriage.

At another time I shall be happy to accept of your polite invitation, was Charles' rejoinder. So, good night.

Good night, was the hero's reply.

Have you got back so soon Charles! said Elizabeth, as her brother entered the sitting room adjoining the library. And she continued, I hope you have seen our young friend safely home.

I have sister, responded Charles, throwing himself clumsily into a chair that stood near him.

And did you see his mother or sister? asked Elizabeth, looking archly at her brother.

Why no, yes, I believe I did see his sister. There was a real pretty, intelligent-looking, young lady at the door with a lighted taper in her hand, and I think it must have been his sister. O, she is real pretty I can tell you sister and I believe that I'm—

In love with her at first sight, laughingly replied Elizabeth. Ha, ha, ha! brother, beware, beware.

I'm about as much in love with her at first sight as a certain young lady of my acquaintance was, when she saw her brother at first sight, retorted Charles. Don't you wish you hadn't said anything now sister.

I'll report your conduct to Miss Julia Simson, repeated Elizabeth, trying to turn the conversation as well as she could.

And I shall report you to Mr. Edward Simson, and then we shall be even, replied Charles.

At this point of the conversation they both commenced laughing heartily, at their own light and playful tete-a-tete.

Tay is ready, Miss Elizabeth, said Dennis, and so the conversation was dropped for the present and they followed Dennis into the dining-room.

Mrs. Edmonds was now quite recovered from her sudden illness and enjoyed her supper as heartily as usual, to the delight and amusement of Dennis.

So your visitor is gone, my dear, observed Mrs. Edmonds to her husband.

Yes, we wanted him to remain to tea with us, replied the husband, but we could not possibly keep him.

It's a great wonder you did not force him to remain sarcastically remarked the wife; and I hope, she continued, that when he calls again he will have the politeness to take off that great patch on his face, so that I can have a good look at him.

That patch covers an honorable wound, mother, sensitively remarked Elizabeth—a wound or one of the wounds he received when our lives were in peril.

Oh! indeed! I had almost forgotten all about that affair; but I'll take very good care that while I am in your company, I'll not miss hearing its repetition often enough.

A noble and gallant act or deed, mother, can never be mentioned too often: be it accomplished by either the rich or poor, and—

Well said my son, exclaimed the merchant, you speak as becomes an honorable man.

You should have known how Julia Simson mimicked him and talked about his uncouth manners and vulgar etiquette. It was really amusing to have heard her when you were in the library.

I do really wish mother, said Charles angrily, that Miss Julia Simson would stay away, and be more of a lady than to act thus towards our good and dear friend and hero.

Why Charles! replied his mother, I'm astonished at your remarks. Surely you do not mean what you have said.

I do most emphatically, replied Charles.

For my own part, said Elizabeth, I think it very unbecoming in ladies to judge so harshly of young men until they become better acquainted with them.

Here the discussion assumed rather a serious aspect and Mr. Edmonds thought he would change the subject, and referred to the noble deeds of Herbert's father and grandfather, the story of which, the reader is already familiar with.

I don't care, doggedly remarked the merchant's wife, if his grandfather had saved your life a dozen times, it would make no difference to me. One thing is certain, I do not wish to see him in my house again, now.

And Mrs. Edmonds left her tea in a fit of unbridled passion, and returned to her room and took up again the volume of her choice.

The merchant shortly afterwards retired to his library, and the noble, high-minded son, and his good and faithful sister prepared themselves for the grand opera at Castle Garden, of a beautiful Prime Donna, who was to make her debut that night.

The next morning things were a more agreeable aspect, and what was said the evening previous, was to a great extent forgotten.

Mrs. Edmonds was expecting company on that day, and, for once in her life she was unusually pleased and agreeable. She asked Elizabeth and Charles how they were pleased with the opera, and if the prima donna exceeded their expectations. To all her questions her son or daughter answered very becomingly.

GRAVEL, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, KIDNEY AND BLADDER, DYSPESIA, FEVER & AGUE.
Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps.

THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured by the proprietor, at Schiedam, Holland, expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own Factory. It is pure Tincture of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose more virtuous spirit is distilled and rectified with a concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and aroma, altogether transcendent in its cordial and medicinal properties to any alcoholic stimulant now made in the world. It is now prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout, Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints. Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

SURGEON DENTISTS.
25 Tremont Street, (opposite) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients,
and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved process of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, in gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability,
we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care
is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a numbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years,
and we feel confident in recommending it to our patients and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has hitherto existed,
of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while in almost all instances, it does much to comfort the patient, and to prepare the application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice
many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preparation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystal
Gold, teeth are not only preserved from decay,
and partially saved, but veritably restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulveru-
lent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin
by virtue of this remarkable property, it is made
to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore
its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

CHAPTER I.

A period of two weeks elapsed since Herbert Ulrich sat in the splendid drawing-room of his friend Mr. Edmonds, but they were weeks of trials and despondency for the noble hero and the faithful, affectionate Phebe,
his sister.

His employer had failed, and his sister's employer sold out to another man, which made an entire change in the prospects of the poor but honorable Ulrich family. And to crown the climax of their already heaped sorrow, the brother and sister were taken sick and laid up.

Herbert lost no time in looking for another situation, but he was destined to be disappointed. Day after day, week after week and month after month did he seek employment in different stores in New York, until his heart grew sick within him. Rent was to be paid, as was also the doctor's bill, and food, fuel, medicine and clothing for the family, but where or how could money be produced for the purchase of those necessaries of life, was a problem in Herbert's mind which could not very easily be solved; all of which had a tendency to prey upon the minds of Herbert and his sister Phebe, who keenly felt their sad position.

While Herbert and his sister sat musing
one fine afternoon, a carriage drove up to the door which contained two distinguished young visitors. The young man, (who was no less a personage than Charles Edmonds), stepped out of the carriage first and after him came his sister Elizabeth. The noise of the old fashioned knocker on the painted door, warned the inmates within that there was some person at the door.

That's the Doctor, Herbert, said Phebe.
Please to open the door, while I see to mother.

Imagine Herbert's astonishment when he opened the door to see before him his friends Charles and Elizabeth Edmonds, who had come to pay them their promised visit.

Herbert invited them into the plain but neat little parlor and introduced his sister Phebe to the distinguished strangers who had entered the parlor unceremoniously, thinking it was the doctor who had called to see her mother, whose life was fast ebbing away.

Your health does not seem to be very good said Miss Edmonds, addressing Herbert who looked pale and careworn.

My health is not to say the best very good, Miss Edmonds, replied Herbert. My mother has been very sick these two weeks but her pains will soon end and she will soon be in a better world we hope, for her suffering for the last week was painful to behold.

Her suffering has been very intense indeed, responded Phebe sadly, but I trust they will soon end. Her physician has given her op.

I hope you will grant us the privilege of seeing her, said the noble hearted Elizabeth,
whose heart was as large and as tender
as it was good and sympathizing.

Certainly, will you please to step this way Miss Edmonds, asked Phebe leading the way towards the sick chamber.

Herbert and Charles following them.
Mrs. Ulrich was in a gentle sleep when the strangers entered the room, but soon she opened her eyes and looked at the strangers
for a moment then closed her eyes again.

Mother, said Herbert, this is Mr. and Miss Edmonds who desired to see you. Speak to them now.

She said not a word for she was too weak,
but moved her parched, colorless lips, as if
about to say something, and failing to speak
she offered her hand to Elizabeth, who was sympathizing with you in your grief; and will hand pointed it upwards, as much as to say,
I will soon be there with God.

The company left the sick chamber and returned to the parlor, where they had not sat long ere the physician knocked at the door and made his appearance for the last time.

He laid his hat and cane on the entry
table, and walked noiselessly into the sick
room and felt of the pulse of his patient.
His looks and actions denoted the soon approach of death.

What news, doctor? asked Herbert. Tell me all—we are prepared for it.

Mr. Ulrich, replied the physician your mother cannot live many hours longer, I am sorry indeed to inform you, but I hope that you and your sister will bear it with resignation and calmness. But I must see her again.

Oh! it will be hard, indeed, to part with her, but we must be resigned to the will of Providence, and submit to His holy wishing,
responded Phebe sadly.

Fear not, Miss Ulrich, said Elizabeth, whose very countenance denoted grief and sadness; I will be a sister to you, and you will not want while it is in brother's or in my power to relieve you.

Many thanks, Miss Edmonds for your kindness and liberality. Oh, Miss! continued
the noble hearted Phebe, my mother was so good, kind, gentle and loving, and if she dies
it will cast a gloom over our home that never can be removed. But God's will be done!
His command must be obeyed.

Hark! exclaimed Herbert. I thought I heard mother's or the doctor's voice. Let us go in and see what the matter is!

Once again did they enter the sick chamber, but alas! Mrs. Ulrich was now free from her earthly pain. Her battle of life was now over, there she lay quiet, smiling, as though
in sleep, after a short but painful sickness, and a glorious and steadfast reliance on Him she so dearly and truly loved while here below.

Poor Phebe and Herbert were now bereft
of their best and truest friend. Their hearts were overburdened with grief and the world
looked dark and gloomy before them.

Indeed, Miss Edmonds done all in her power to comfort and give her some hope and solace which Phebe kindly appreciated not a little, and Charles, too, did not forget to cast a flower here and there in the rough thorny pathway of his friend Herbert.

Before they left the house they promised Phebe and Herbert that they would attend
their mother's funeral, and then bidding
them a fond and an affectionate farewell,
with tears in their eyes, they entered their carriage and departed for their home of joy
and happiness.

It was the first time in their lives, that Charles and Elizabeth ever had attended the sick and dying, and the impression that the death of Mrs. Ulrich made on their young hearts was truly sad and impressive.

Herbert and his sister were always very frugal and saving while in their situations,
and laid aside money every week. Of course it was a trifling sum, but it was good to have
it at their command; but the severe sickness
of their mother, together with many other little expenses, eat up the greater part of it, consequently at the time of their mother's death they had barely enough in their possession to bury her decently and as they would wish.

It was Mrs. Ulrich's desire while living that wherever she died that Herbert and Phebe should not forget, (if within their power,) to have her remains taken to the churchyard, where slept her cherished husband whom she dearly loved, and they promised her so to do.

What was to be done? They had not enough money to comply with their mother's request, but had just barely enough to bury her in some obscure corner in Greenwood Cemetery. They came to the conclusion, however, to have her laid there for a few months, and when money could be procured
they would fulfil their promise and have her remains deposited with their father. But God raised up for them good friends with whom they were not but very little acquainted with, but they proved themselves true
and good friends to Herbert and Phebe Ulrich in their dark and dreariest hours of adversity. On the morning after the death of Mrs. Ulrich the postman knocked at the door and handed a letter to Phebe Ulrich addressed to her brother Herbert which she lost no time in handing over to him to read. On opening the letter imagine their surprise at finding in it an hundred dollar bill with the following few lines which are very brief
and to the point.

MR. HERBERT ULRICH—Dear Sir—Accept one hundred dollars, which you will find inclosed in this letter, and believe me, I sympathize with you in your grief; and will ever remain your warm friend, through weal
and woe. I remain yours, &c.

Why, what does this mean sister, said
Herbert looking strangely at Phebe and then at the money. It bears no date, and I cannot tell where or whom it came. It might have come from some of our old employers,
or neighbors.

No it could not be possible, replied Phebe,
that Mr. Little would open his heart so wide
as to send us that large amount of money.

And I have the same opinion concerning
my old employers, replied Herbert.

That hundred dollars came in a lucky hour
for it saved them many a pang of bitter grief
and drove away many a heavy cloud of woe
from their weary hearts.

On the morning of the third day after Mrs.
Ulrich's death, her remains were placed in a neat mahogany coffin, afterwards it was deposited in the hearse which was waiting at the door; and then the funeral procession formed which was composed of twelve carriages, among the number and immediately
behind the hearse, was the carriage of Mr.
Edmonds, which contained the merchant, his son, daughter and Phebe Ulrich; whilst Herbert was in the next carriage with some more of his young friends, who were to accompany him to the State of Maine, where they were to perform the last sad office over the cold remains of the lamented mother, and true Christian.

The mortal remains were taken from the hearse and placed on the steamer which was to leave that afternoon for Boston, and here
it was that grief and despondency filled the hearts of the many mourners, particularly Herbert and Phebe.

It was the intention of Phebe to accompany her brother to Boston and Portland, but so weak and sickly did she become while at the pier, that medical aid was sent for to restore
her to health, and she was taken to the house of her father, where she remained until she was able to go home.

Mr. Edmonds will you be kind enough to take charge of my sister until I get back to the city again?

Most assuredly, Mr. Ulrich, was the warm and generous response of the free-hearted
merchant; and I wish you every blessing
which this world can afford, on your sad
journey to the east.

Thank you, sir, warmly responded Herbert; and the crystal tears streamed down
from his blood-shot eyes, which once sparkled like twin stars on the bow of lovely night.

Salutations were exchanged on the wharf,
and poor Herbert and his young friends were now moving from the pier, amid sobs, and sighs, and tears of those few, good, and noble-hearted friends, who were his true and best companions, when adversity and sorrow
pressed their cold and icy hands upon him,
and his once happy little family.

The steamer which contained the mortal remains of poor Mrs. Ulrich was now out of sight, and the mourners returned again to their respective homes, not however, without giving words of encouragement and hope to the fair, but now sad and weary-hearted Phebe.

Indeed she was too weak and feeble to accompany her brother to the east, and Mr. Edmonds and family persisted that she should unlike their house, her home until her brothers arrived at New York.

Phebe thanked her friends very kindly but refused at first to comply with their urgent and benevolent wishes, but the Edmonds
family would not take "no," for an answer,
and so she had to obey their commands and proceed with them to their home where she was well cared for and loved by all the family with the exception of Mrs. Edmonds, who remarked privately to her husband that she would not be surprised on hearing some fine
day, that he would take into his house all the paupers around the city, and feast and clothe them.

Mr. Edmonds, Charles and Elizabeth tried in vain to impress upon her mind that their guest was highly educated, respectable and descended from honest, honorable and christian parents, upon whom the hand of misfortune had severely fallen; but she would not listen, or even hear one word from either of them.

Phebe was so prostrated in health that she did not leave her bed for five days, after her arrival at the merchant's mansion; and, being among strangers whom she never saw or knew until a few days before, it preyed upon her mind and spirits not a little, I can assure you. But yet, she knew she had good and faithful friends in Charles and Elizabeth Edmonds, which consoled her a great deal.

Miss Edmonds and her faithful servant,
Mary, done all in their power to cheer and comfort their drooping invalid, and soon restored her to her former health. Indeed they often rode out together to take an airing
in the outskirts of the city, which had a great tendency to drive away the gloom which sat
heavy and dark on her beating heart.

Charles, too, joined his sister and Phebe
whenever he could spare an afternoon, and by his suavity of manners and witty remarks upon divers subjects, he helped to make the drooping flower under their charge, as merry
and happy as circumstances would permit.

But Phebe's mind was always wandering,
and whilst she was surrounded by luxury and splendor, her thoughts were still far away.
She often thought of Herbert, and her dead
mother; and the thought of her early, happy childhood, oft entered her mind and oppressed her exceedingly. She thought of the time when she sat in her parents house
free from care and strife. 'Twas then she thought that sunshine, and flowers, and rippling streams, and the sweet music of birds,
were all made to gratify her innocent heart.

Her life then, was as smooth and as untroubled
as a crystal lake, when the gentle zephyrs
sank to rest behind the grand old mountains of her native State. Her bright path was then strewn with blushing roses, that seemed to greet her, as it were, and say—Good morning, sweet, little playmate, Phebe. But now
she had no parents, no home, no true and real friend upon whom she could confide or trust in.

No friends, did I say? Ah, yes, I forgot.
Yes, she had friends, friends in name, as well
as in action, friends that would never see her in want or in distress, and those friends, were none other than Elizabeth and Charles Edmonds, and their ever kind and philanthropic father. As for Mrs. E., why, her very looks were enough to sink the spirits of the liveliest
and most rousing person in the world much more so, one of Phebe's ardent, loving temperament.

Indeed, when she was first introduced to Mrs. E., by her husband (the self same evening), Herbert left for the East to obey
to the manly wish of his father, to bury his respect or friendship than was her brother, towards poor Mary, whom she treated with coldness, harshness, and unfeelingly.

Mrs. E. had a very high estimation of herself, and at times, she carried it to very great extremes, and she, poor lady, could not see why her husband and children did not take after her, or even did not so much as imitate
her in a few of her little oddities, as she herself used to express it.

Mrs. E. was considered by those with whom she used to associate with, a very fine
kind, gentle, amiable and charitable lady, and set her down as a Christian woman. Nor could they very well help thinking so, for she always made it a point, to put on her best smiles and most winning graces, which went to show how well she could play her cunning part. We cannot judge better of a woman than by her hearing, seeing and conversing with her, a her own house, year after year. By constant interviews and tete-a-tetes with her,
she becomes more open hearted and free. It was in this position exactly, that Mrs. Edmonds stood before her admirers up town,
and her own family and servants at home.

She would thank God that the Bible was making its way through the very heart of India; whilst she would drive a poor little girl from the steps of her rich mansion, who was weak and feeble from hunger.

She did not like poor people to come too near or trouble her, and she, therefore, made it a point to let the poor take care of themselves. She would rather send a thousand Bibles to India, to be distributed among the heathens, than to distribute a few loaves of bread amongst the poor, which, day and night surrounded her in the great metropolis of America.

Mrs. E. and Phebe were two opposite characters, and, therefore, as a matter of course, their conversation whenever they came together was very brief and to the point.
She looked upon Phebe as a poor girl who was only fit for a servant, like Mary, or else
a school teacher in some little country, down
east, town or village.

She knew that Phebe was a beautiful singer and an accomplished pianist, for she had a good opportunity of hearing her, and her daughter, Elizabeth, every day. In fact, Mrs.
E. was one of those queer ladies who believed that a poor person shouldn't possess,
if they did, or rarely, very rarely possessed
any mind of superior mould—judging by herself, of course.

But Phebe had talent and beauty, as well
as refinement of manners and accomplishments,
which Charles Edmonds was not slow in discovering and pondered over, both night and day, and sometimes in his dreams.

Julia Simson and brother, made a few calls when Phebe first went to the Edmonds mansion, but they were greatly astonished that Miss Edmonds kept the company of one as Phebe was, and laughed heartily at the idea of the family going to the funeral and taking evening rides out in the country, and many other trifling objections, too numerous to mention. I am greatly surprised at Charles too, said Julia Simson, how odd he acts of late.

Well my dear, replied Mrs. E. I am sure I cannot help it. They will persist in their vulgar way despite of all I can do or say to them. I know but one course to take, continue Mrs. E. and that is, to tell Elizabeth that she must give up her company, and that Miss Ulrich must find a home somewhere else. You would be doing no more than your duty, Mrs. Edmonds, I think, replied Miss Julia Simson.

Do you really think so Miss Simson? said
Charles, who overheard all the conversation
in the library. Mother, you and Miss Simson are wrong in your calculations, and I am sure that Miss Ulrich does not deserve this backbiting from ladies like yourselves. This is a lady in every sense of the term, and I cannot, will not listen to any person, who takes a delight in speaking disparagingly of her, or her brother.

Why, my dear, what is the matter with you, inquired Mrs. E. of Charles, are you in earnest? No, no! it cannot be! Yes, my dear, replied Charles, I am in earnest, and turning on his heel he left the parlor.

Miss Simson breathed a little freer when Charles left the parlor, for she did not feel very comfortable whilst he was addressing
them about their imprudence and backbiting.
Their words were heard by Charles Edmonds,
who did not let them pass unrebuked. Julia Simson was very sorry to be caught in so mean a business as that of gossiping, and what was more than all this, she was greatly alarmed that Mr. Edmonds was displeased with her, which troubled her not a little.

Mrs. Edmonds was greatly displeased with again, and that Mrs. E. and Charles had leave the house immediately. She flew into a most uncontrollable passion, which was next to an impossibility to subdue or control,
but being accustomed to such outbursts on former occasions, she soon recovered from her over-heated excitement and trepidation.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Walking.

Our old Massachusetts is splendidly adapted for peregrinations. Our surface is rolling, hilly, but not roughly mountainous. A level country like Illinois is not fit for walking; for a square yard is as good as the whole State
as to variety of surface. Besides, in early days the prairie was a serious obstacle—Again, somebody says, with what truth we won't say, that the trees were so large and so thick on the ground in Northern Wisconsin, that there is no walking to be done except in the streams. Our State has none of these disadvantages from its fertility. On the contrary, the hills and valleys furnish that variety of scenery that renders a walk one of the most excellent means of improvement.

The whole man is invigorated, and even the eyes are rendered so brilliant that, if our young ladies could realize its sweet effects
upon their expression, their habits would soon be changed for the better. This some one remarks of Wordsworth, who was not remarkable for lustre of eyes, but when he had taken a long walk, and climbed some rugged steep, his eyes became almost angelic in their expression. Some French writer says, "I have no enthusiasm for the country that first sudden chilly wind will not dissipate." But this is the language of one not awake to the life of nature. Here in New England, the climate is of the best quality for health and vigor. It is true we have our coarse days, and dog-days, and white days, and days the north winds render ice blinks; but we have also our fine days—our summer weather, ripening rapidly and in perfection fruits that require a semi-tropical climate, and our beautiful October weather succeeding the first frost of autumn. Who can describe the beauty of that season, when nature seems waiting or preparing for, or delaying for a little space her retiring to rest in the silence of winter? Foreigners have noticed the beauty of our autumnal foliage, peculiar to New England. Recently has been explained. The leaf gets ripe, in our dry autumnal air, while in Europe the moisture in the air causes a too early decomposition. We have no settled prognostics of the weather,
unless this, that when it is warm, it is a sign that it will be soon cold. So that warm clothing, great coats, boots and even mittens,

may be in requisition for a persevering walker. Again, when walking we are in the open air, and thus are brought in contact with nature's best and most blessed gift. The cortical glands are so numerous and so finely adapted to receive the sweet atmosphere that no one can walk in the open air without hidden food of life. Plutarch seems to incline to Anaximenes' opinion, remarking that perhaps the reason why there is a sympathy of feeling on various subjects arises from breathing the same air. Air is an exhalation of all the minerals of the globe; the most elaborately finished of all the works of the Creator—the rock of ages disintegrated and sifted for the life of man. All classes of men affirm this. Sydney Smith says to public speakers that if they would walk twelve miles before speaking, they would never break down. In English universities, boat races, horseback rides, and ten mile walks
are a part of the educational means for physical development. Plato says a walk in the open air will almost cure a guilty conscience.
R. W. Emerson.

The Grasshoppers.

The vast swarms of grasshoppers which have been devastating the prairies of Texas,
steered a northward course upon their departure thence, and as they rose to a great height from the ground, as though for a long journey, it is a melancholy conclusion that they are coming up this way. Myriads of them are now eating up vegetation in Ohio.
It is therefore no very violent supposition
that Pennsylvania, with a rather milder climate than Iowa, is not unlikely to be visited by them. These insects are not like the common grasshopper, which are every summer found in our fields and roads, but are of the size of a locust, with the same gregarious habits. The ordinary grasshopper is weak of wing, and never rises to a great height,
whereas the locusts which have so repeatedly desolated Utah and Texas, rise far into the upper air, and move off together to great distances like wild geese. They appear in systematic hosts, and instead of the usual
light and airy manner of the common grasshopper, they are reduced to a state of afflicted mortals were reduced to a state of extremity.

They seem now to have attacked
our frontier States, and to be moving gradually into the body of the Republic. The horrors of famine have never been felt in our country, and, accustomed to the most profuse abundance, it is a calamity, to which no one has ever looked; yet these grasshoppers are a terrible visitation to a region.—Philadelphia American.

SCHIDAM Aromatic Schnapps.
THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured by the proprietor, at Schidam, Holland, expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own factory. It is pure Tincture of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose more viruous extract is distilled and rectified with its spirituous solvent, which thus becomes a concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and aroma, altogether transcendent in its cordial and medicinal properties to any alcoholic stimulant now made in the world. It is now prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout, Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints.

Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

Poetry.

Perpetual Creation
BY W. C. BRYANT.

My heart is awed within me, when I think
Of the great miracle that still goes on,
In silence, round me—the perpetual work
Of thy creation, finished, yet renewed Forever. Written on the works I read
The lessons of thy own eternity.
Lo! all grow old and die—but see again,
How on thy faltering footsteps of decay
Youth presses—ever gay and beautiful youth
In all its beautiful forms. These lofty trees
Wave not less proudly than their ancestors
Moulder beneath them. O, there is not lost
One of earth's charms; upon her bosom yet,
After the flight of untold centuries,
The freshness of her hair beginning lies,
And yet shall lie. Life mocks the idle hate
Of her arch enemy, Death—yea, seats himself
Upon the sepulchre, and blooms and smiles,
And of the triumphs of his ghastly foe
Makes his own nourishment. For he came forth
From thine own bosom, and shall have no end.

What's Tramps?

There are so many cards to play;
So many ways to choose,
In love and politics and war,
That forwarding our views
With ladies fair with staid men,
Or men of lesser bumps,
Before we lead our strongest wits
'Tis well to know what's tramps.

Once, worshipping at beauty's shrine,
I knelt in bondage sweet,
And breathed my vows with eagerness,
And offered at her feet
My soul, well stored with Cupid's wealth—
A love cemented lump;
A king of diamonds won the trick,
My heart was not a tramp.

Raving to see my rival win
Upon a single rub,
As he had played the deuce with me,
I followed with a club!
Two days within a station-house,
Reflecting on my sin,
I found, as others may have done,
Clubs very seldom win.

Grown wise by sad experience,
I ceased to deal with mads;
I shuffled youthful follies off,
And turned up jack of spades;
Yet still I find as dust is scarce,
And smaller grow the lumps,
That though the spade's an honest card,
It is not always tramps.

But in the world of outside show,
Where Mammon rules the throng,
To ease the little joints of life,
And smoothly pass along,
To find an antidote for care
And stern misfortune's bumps,
One card is very sure to win—
Diamonds are always tramps.

Backbone.

To dress, and sit, and walk gently,
To bow with easy grace;
To speak in accents soft and mealy,
To wear a studied frown;
These, and like goodly gifts and graces,
Are well enough, I own;
But what we want in this soft age, is Bone—backbone.

A heart to feel, a mind to think,
Despite each base control;
A tongue to speak, a hand to work,
The purpose of the soul;
By these, and other goodly tokens,
It may be surely known
If this or that, without the body,
Is bone—backbone.

Give me a man that's all a man,
Who stands up straight and strong;
Who loves the plain and simple right,
And will not yield to wrong;
Who deals with firm, unflinching hand,
To every one his own;
Oh! a blessed thing in anybody,
Is bone—backbone!

Anecdotes.

I say, friend, your horse is a little contrary,
is he not?
No, sir-ee!
What makes him stop then?
O, he's afraid somebody'll say "whoa," and
he shan't hear it.

An old unloved deacon in his last hours
was visited by a neighbor, who said—
Well, deacon, I hope you feel resigned
to going.
Yes, said the deacon, I-I think I am resigned.
Well, said the other, I thought it might be consonant to you to know that all the neighbors are resigned also.

A judge in Indiana threatened to fine a lawyer for contempt of court, and was answered thus—
I have expressed no contempt for the court,
said the lawyer; on the contrary I have carefully concealed my feelings.

Plaz, sir, said an Irishman to a traveller,
would yer be so obliging as to take my great
coat to Boston with ye?
Yes, said the man in the wagon, but how will you get it again?
Och, that's mighty aisy, said Pat, for sure
I'll remain in it.

You need a little sun and air, said a physician to a maiden patient.
If I do, was the cute reply, I'll wait till I get married.

I am absolutely afraid, said an extravagant
nobleman, that I shall die a beggar.
At the rate you go on, replied his lawyer,
I am afraid you will die one.

Jack, hasten thou any money in the stocks?
Why no, Roger, I never had a farthing in the stocks, but I have had my legs in them often enough.

WEYMOUTH LANDING, May, 16.

DR. S. STOCKING,
DENTAL SURGEON

No. 19 Tremont Row, (up stairs),
Directly opposite the head of Brattle Street,
BOSTON.

CONTINUES to perform all operations on
the teeth, such as filling, setting, cleansing,
regulating, and extracting, on such terms as
make his services accessible to all. Having carefully selected, from the great mass of qualified dentists, and uniting in their efforts, what is of real value; and combining such improvements with the experience of more than twenty five years of close application to the duties of the profession he may be permitted to say
that whatever pertains to the dental profession,
whether mechanical or surgical, he is fully competent to perform. To do justice, and give satisfaction in all cases that come under the supervision of a dentist, though often attended with some difficulty, should be the aim and study of
all who assume the responsibility of the care of
the teeth; and the failure of so many in accomplishing what they promise,—though in their intentions and uniting in their efforts,—
must be attributed, either to their ignorance of
the principle upon which dental operations are
based, or the want of experience and ingenuity
to apply them. Take, for instance, the nice operation of putting a tooth, a process of
great apparent simplicity, yet it is the most difficult of execution, and important in its consequences, of any within the range of operative dentistry. So true is this, that not more than one in twenty who belong to the profession, is qualified to fill a tooth with a setting teeth, especially whole and half sets, where correct taste and sound judgment are required
in combination with skill in mechanism. There is, however, still another item embraced in the
qualifications and services of the dentist, of paramount importance, which is called for at the present day, in administering either for the removal of teeth. The natural teeth may be improperly filled, and even ruined;—artificial ones
may be badly set, and fail to answer the purpose for which they were made;—but neither life nor health is thereby endangered. Not so in the administration of ether. It is an agent
that should be confined to the care and control
of intelligent men, who have learned its peculiarities and effects on the human system. The use of a sponge or cloth in its administration,
though a little more convenient for the administrator, is not, by any means, the best method.
Either should be so administered as to prevent
the air once breathed from entering the lungs a second time. The natural consequence of the process of respiration. The natural consequence
of inhaling ether over and over again, from a
sponge held over the mouth and nose, is to produce more or less of nausea, vomiting, and faintness, if nothing worse, during administration, with distressing headache, faintness, and extreme lassitude, for many hours after. All these effects, however, are almost entirely obviated by
the INHALING APPARATUS used by Dr.
Stocking, who gives special attention to the administration of ether for the removal of teeth,
preparatory to the setting of whole and half sets.

CHAPTER XI.
There is no use in telling me anything to the contrary, said Mrs. Edmonds to her husband as he sat in his chair, after the severe and arduous duties of the day. There, I am sure, she continued, that Charles is making too free with Miss Ulrick—he is all the time with her, conversing about this, that and the other; and Elizabeth is just as bad, or foolish I call it.

Well, I am sure there is no harm in that, my dear, responded her husband. Young folks love the society of each other more than they do the society of old people, and you cannot blame them if they do laugh and joke together once in a while.

I shall not allow it, was the wife's tart reply, and furthermore, what will the Simson family say about the matter?
Let them say what they please, my dear, I'm sure I can't see anything wrong about it.
Here Mrs. Edmonds became greatly exasperated and sternly remarked that she would not tolerate it any longer.
She then left the room and rang the bell for Mary who lost no time in approaching her, for she knew well the temper and eccentricities of her mistress.
Mary, tell Miss Edmonds that I want to see her immediately. Now do be quick, pray.

She is taking a walk in the garden ma'am, replied the servant.
Who is with her?
Miss Ulrick, ma'am.
Tell her I want to see her instantly.
Yes ma'am, I will, responded the servant, who ran towards the garden to inform Miss Edmonds that her mother wished to see her instantly!
I'll be there in a few minutes. But what does mother want of me, Mary, do you know?
No, I do not, was the servant's response.
Elizabeth excused herself to Phebe for a few moments, and hastened to see what her mother wanted, which she very soon found out. She was not at all surprised at her mother's remarks, for Charles and her kind father had told her about it days before, concerning Phebe Ulrick, who knew nothing of the ill-feelings which the merchant's wife cherished against her.
Has anything unpleasant occurred, asked Phebe of her friend as she again returned to the garden, with tears rolling down her pale cheeks.
No, Phebe, it is of no importance; and I know it would not interest you. But I may tell you all about it some other time. Will not that suffice, Phebe?
Do not call me Miss Edmonds, said the noble girl and true friend; please to call me Elizabeth, for you know I call you Phebe, because it sounds much prettier I think than Miss. We are not strangers now, we are more than friends—sister; and she kissed and embraced Phebe, who warmly returned the kind and merited compliment.
As I live, here comes Charles and he has a letter, for either you or me.
We will soon see who it is for, Miss—Elizabeth, said Phebe, I forgot.
A letter for Miss Ulrick, ejaculated Charles, as he approached the ladies.
I thank you, Mr. Edmonds, responded Phebe, bowing most gracefully to him.
It is from Herbert, said Phebe, as she glanced at the superscription of the letter; Oh, I am real glad to hear from him.

I hope he is improving in health, replied Elizabeth.

He complains a little about his health, answered Phebe, and says he expects to arrive here on Saturday morning next, but—
Have you heard from your brother, Miss Ulrick, enquired Charles, who noticed Phebe folding up her letter and looking rather melancholy.

Yes, this is from him, and he informs me that he will be here in a few days, and desires to be remembered to his good friends. We'll be glad to welcome him when he arrives, said Charles, looking meaningly at Elizabeth, and—
Dinner is ready master Charles, interrupted the servant.

Very well, Dennis, we will be there in a minute; and offering an arm to each of the ladies, escorted them from the garden into the dining-room, where sat the merchant and his wife waiting their arrival.

Dinner being over, the merchant told his son Charles that he wished to see him for a few minutes in his library as he had something of importance to communicate to him. They accordingly went into the library, locked the door and seated themselves upon the lounge close to each other.

Well Charles, commenced Mr. Edmonds, you are well aware that your mother insists upon having Miss Ulrick leave the house, and as she might say something to her that would wound her fine feelings, I deem it prudent and wise to comply with her wishes.

But father, where can she go? And besides her brother is not here to advise or see to her.
You need not let that trouble you Charles, for you must know that I have been trying to get her a good situation as governess in the family of my friend Watson Sinclair, who will gladly receive her and treat her with the respect and courtesy which she so truly and worthily merits.

But she may not accept of it, father; I think you had better speak to her about it.—
But father, continued Charles, what will poor Herbert do when he arrives from the east?

I have not forgotten him either, responded Mr. Edmonds. I heard you praise his paintings not long ago, and the thought entered my mind as I was passing by Mr. Lawson's this morning, that I would interest myself a little in Mr. Ulrick's behalf, and I am happy to inform you that I was successful.

Then Mr. Lawson will take him as a student, said Charles, who was evidently much pleased at his father's remarks.

Yes, he told me he would give him a trial, and see if he had any talent for painting, was the father's response.

I am sure Phebe and Herbert will be greatly surprised when they hear of this good news, and so will sister Elizabeth.

Well, you can tell her as soon as you please, and she can communicate it to Miss Ulrick, and when Herbert comes you can inform him of what I've just told you. If he should refuse that offer I can give him a chance in my store, for I know he would not accept of any money from me. I've had proof of that already.

He is too high spirited for that, responded Charles, and I do not believe he would have accepted that hundred dollars you sent him a few weeks ago, if he had known where it came from.

He is a very singular young man, indeed, said Mr. Edmonds, and he is as good and noble as he is eccentric and modest. But I have got an engagement to fulfil downtown, and you may tell the coachman to harness the black mare as soon as possible, and to drive round to the door. Now do stir yourself, Charles.

I'll attend to it immediately, sir, said the pleased and obedient son, and taking his hat hurried to the stable.

Now Charles, do please tell me what father has been saying to you all this time, said Elizabeth, who divined by her brother's happy appearance and smiling face that he had heard some good news from her father.

Wait until father goes downtown, replied Charles, and then I'll tell you what he said. Won't that please you?

Yes; but now you must not forget, will you?
No, not for the world. You may depend upon me this time without fail.

CHAPTER XII.

Well, Miss Ulrick, said Charles, with a look of sadness depicted on his manly face, this is the last evening we are to spend in each other's company for months, perhaps for years, but I am sure you will not forget me when you leave my father's house. I am to leave home to-morrow morning to complete my college studies, and you are to leave for your new home in Baltimore.

It is sad indeed to think of leaving such good friends you have been to us, but I hope the day is not far distant when Herbert and myself may be able to show our gratitude in return for all the favors your family has shown us, was Phebe's sincere reply.

Do not mention it I pray, returned Charles. You know that this is a world of changes, and to do a little service for our neighbors once in a while, is no more than right, particularly so, when we owe to them our lives.

The thought of parting from poor Herbert, responded Phebe, is, I fear, more than I can bear. A month ago we had a mother and a home, she sobbingly continued, but now we have no mother, no home!

To part with such a good brother, said Charles, is I know a sorrowful thing to contemplate, but you must bear in mind that he is now with my father's friend, Louis Lawson, the most celebrated artist in the country, and it may be, that, at a future day, Herbert may become his equal.

Would to heaven that I could live to see that day, responded Phebe, with great animation.

Such incidents, ejaculated Charles are not impossible. We have heard and read of such things occurring in every country, and why not in ours, where true merit and genius find the freest scope.

Very true, Mr. Edmonds, exclaimed Phebe, but what are wealth and honors compared with love and contentment. I know that Herbert is very ambitious, and that, I fear, will be the cause of destroying his health, which, at present, is not very promising.

What you say is very true, replied Charles, but you are well aware that all professions are hard and tedious at first, but soon they become easy, light and agreeable.

Father says I must become a lawyer and wouldn't it be a grand, a glorious idea to have Herbert become a great painter and a great lawyer? Ha, ha! Egad, Phebe, (I must call you Phebe because my sister does,) I hope it may turn out so one of these days. But, bless my soul, I've been talking here all this time, and had almost forgotten to ask one important question, which I hope you will answer with candor and sincerity.

I will answer you with the greatest of pleasure, responded the blushing Phebe, that is if it lays in my power so to do.

It is now a little over one month since you arrived, a perfect stranger, at my father's house, and ever since that time up to the present hour, you have made an impression on my heart, which can never be erased. I know your worth and so does my father and sister. They have always spoken of you in the highest terms; nor did they estimate you too highly, for I have found you all, and more than they represented you to be.

Mr. Edmonds, said Phebe, will you excuse me; I wish to retire to my room. What would your mother say if she saw us here alone; besides you know she does not like me very well—my good friend, your sister, told me all about it last night. Oh! would that I had never entered your father's house sobbed the trembling Phebe.

I am sorry Phebe, that my mother is such an unkind woman, said Charles, but it matters not for that. This cloud will soon pass away, and then will come the light and golden sunshine. My mother suspects that I love you, and she has tried all in her power to separate us forever, but it remains with you to say whether that will be so or not.

Love me! exclaimed the timid girl, Love me! she reiterated, why surely Mr. Edmonds, you do not mean to trifle with me whom misfortune has made a wanderer of. Ah, no, I am sure you are too much of a gentleman to trifle with a poor friendless orphan girl, who has none but God to rely upon in this dark, unfriendly and hard-hearted world. I am sure you cannot mean what you say.

I mean all that I say, responded Charles, and, believe me, when I say it, that you are the only one I have ever loved, or ever can love. It is true that I could give my hand to others, who are weakly, and more in the highest circles of society, so called, but yet my heart would recoil from them, nor could I ever love or cherish them as I do you; and Charles pressed her to his manly heart, and weined her reply.

Think, reflect, I beg of you, replied Phebe. What would your mother say? What would all your friends say? and furthermore, I am a poor friendless girl now, and—I have thought, I have reflected, interrupted Charles, and I care not for what my mother would say, and I am sure, that as for friends, or what they would say, the thought has never entered my mind. You speak of being poor and friendless, which I think is a great mistake, for you possess those fine qualities which gold cannot purchase, viz: virtue, honor, purity, goodness, meekness, and a heart, which, but few of your sex possess the like of, not to mention your beauty, education and many other rare and noble accomplishments. And I am sure you are not without friends so long as my father and sister lives. As for myself, I want to be more than friend to you, if you will but accept my hand and heart.

Give me time to think, Charles, timidously exclaimed Phebe, we will speak about this matter some other time.

Do you forget that on to-morrow we part, said Charles, at the same time pressing the warm kiss of affection for the first time upon her rosy lips.

I am aware of that Charles, said Phebe, but at present, I will have to decline answering your proposal.

Why not answer it now, replied Charles, I am anxious to know my fate at once. Perhaps, you are attached to another, whom you love more than you do me. If so, let me know it at once, and I will release you from further embarrassments on my part.

No, Charles, I do not love another, said Phebe, earnestly. Will that suffice?

Then, responded Charles, will you not love me, if so you think me unworthy of your love. If so, tell me.

I have ever loved you Charles, meekly replied Phebe, ever since the day that I saw you and your sweet sister, standing at the bedside of my poor dying mother, but I did not dare to reveal it to a living soul, for I knew that our situations in life were very different and opposite in their character.

I've kept it a secret in my locked up heart, until this very hour, and now that you have forced the truth from me, you know all. I can say no more.

You are a noble, faithful, true-hearted girl, was Charles' response, and now I am satisfied upon this condition: Say that you will become my wife! I am sincere and honorable, he continued, and I hope ere we part from this spot, that you will acquiesce to the greatest wish of my heart.

Phebe rested both her delicate hands upon Charles' shoulders, and looking up until her large dreamy eyes met his, exclaimed in her usual modest way, that little, but meaning monosyllable, yes! which sent a thrill of unearthly happiness through Charles Edmonds' heart.

Now, said Charles, laughingly, let me seal this holy and never-to-be-forgotten contract, with a kiss. You are mine and I am thine forever. To-morrow we must part, but the time will soon come, when I can lead you to the marriage altar, and then we shall part no more till death shall separate us.

But remember Charles," said Phebe, that this must be kept a secret, until such a time as you may propose to lead me to the altar.

Oh, I don't care who knows it now, Phebe, replied Charles, but as you request me to do so, I will most certainly obey your commands, so now for one more kiss ere we part.

Ha, ha, ha! so I've caught you this time, Charles, said Elizabeth, as she entered the little cozy sitting room where the lovers were talking over their future plans. Why, I've been looking for you and Phebe this half hour, and I come to the conclusion that you both had eloped without letting me know a word about it.

Phebe was much confused, but fortunately for her, it was twilight, and Elizabeth could not very well perceive her blushes.

Oh, exclaimed Charles, it is not quite as bad as all that, sister, you judge me too harshly, methinks. Eh, Miss Ulrick, isn't that so?

Oh, I shall say nothing about that kiss I heard just now, replied Elizabeth, laughing heartily at her brother and Phebe.

You are really provoking, Elizabeth, responded Charles, as he rose from his seat and went towards the door.

Indeed, I am real sorry that I disturbed you, and I hope you will forgive me this once. I'll not do so again, said Elizabeth, turning towards her friend Phebe, who still retained her seat at the window.

This is our last evening together, replied Charles, and I just felt to-night, like having a little tele-tele, with Miss Ulrick—that's all.

A very nice excuse, truly, brother, I see into it all, but no matter, it was nothing more than I expected.

Well, well, interrupted Charles I must leave you and Miss Ulrick, for a little while, and I may join you again by-and-by; and Charles walked up to his room to contemplate on the busy future. His mind was now engrossed about her who but a few minutes before, vowed and declared that she loved him more than any other being on earth.

Charles Edmonds now become a changed young man, and a new energy seemed to take hold of his very soul. Bright and glorious visions of the future seemed to transport him from the lonely chamber where he was sitting, to the side of his loved and cherished Phebe, when around their own fireside. But this parting to-morrow from each other, is more than I can bear, soliloquized Charles. Well, be it so, he continued, a few years will soon fly away and then we shall be happy and contented forever.

If she can bear the separation, why cannot I? But there is one consolation still left us.

and that is a correspondence with each other.

The next day dawned bright and beautiful—sunshine and bird music betokened the first dawn of early spring. Charles Edmonds was now fully restored to health, and was to leave that morning for college to complete his studies, and Phebe Ulrick was to leave at the same hour to assume the duties of governess in the family of Watson Sinclair.

As Charles entered the carriage, his countenance denoted a troubled, sorrowful heart, and he turned his head one side, to hide the falling tear of grief, as it rolled down his cheek. In a few minutes after the departure of Charles, another carriage was following in his track, or at least part way, (for they were destined for two different roads.) It contained three persons, who were none other than Elizabeth, Phebe, and her brother Herbert, who had come that morning to the Edmonds' mansion to see his sister off. It was a painful sight to him to witness, but circumstances had so ordered it, and so it was to be.

The shrill voice of the engine whistle warned Phebe that the cars were about to start, and Elizabeth, her dear and cherished friend, bade her a last farewell, which found a hearty, though sad response from Phebe.

Elizabeth was now seated in her carriage and opposite to her sat Herbert Ulrick, whom she loved with as deep and true affection as Phebe loved her (Elizabeth's) brother Charles.

They rode a few squares from the depot without saying a word to each other. At last Herbert broke the sorrowful spell which bound them, and said with a deep sigh, I do not believe, Miss Edmonds, that I will ever see Phebe again, alive.

What did you observe, Mr. Ulrick? responded Elizabeth, wiping the tear drops from her eyes and looking at him sadly in the face.

I said, reiterated Herbert, that I do not believe I'll ever see sister Phebe again, alive.

Why, you must not let such thoughts enter your mind, said Elizabeth encouragingly. Do tell me pray, what put that idea in your mind.

You are aware, replied Herbert, that I saw her for a few minutes at your house last evening.

I am aware of it, Herbert, was Elizabeth's response. But what of that?

She there and then told me, that she felt very unwell, and complained of a severe headache, and she looked pale and downcast.

What has caused it I wonder, enquired Elizabeth, who looked not a little surprised at Herbert, while he was conversing with her about his sister's illness.

I would rather not mention it, Miss Edmonds, said Herbert.

Ah! I know now, quickly responded Elizabeth. My mother did not like to have Charles keep her company, but I do know that she loves her, for he often told me so, and I'm sure I've got the utmost confidence in his word.

I am the cause of all this trouble, Miss Edmonds, sadly replied Herbert. I requested your kind father to take her under his protection until I got back from New York, which he nobly and most generously did. She was too weak to accompany me upon that solemn occasion, as you are already aware.

I remember it well, replied the good Elizabeth.

She has spoken of your father, brother, and yourself in particular, in the highest praise, said Herbert, but—the subject is painful Miss Edmonds, and I shall say no more about what followed. You know it all at least so my sister told me.

Do, I do! responded the weeping girl, but Mr. Ulrick, won't you forgive my mother? I know you will. Do for my sake!

For your sake, I forgive her all the pangs of grief she has sent through my poor sister's heart, and I'm sure that Phebe will do likewise. It is no more than right that we should do so. Your father has changed our path of gloom and woe, into sunshine and smiles, and has raised us from poverty to happiness.

Well, we will speak about these little matters some other time, replied the lovely and accomplished Elizabeth, and I hope you will favor me with a call, when—

Here the sentence was rather abruptly cut off, on account of the carriage stopping at the Edmonds' mansion a little sooner than they anticipated.

Will you not walk in, Mr. Ulrick, asked Elizabeth, very gravely, for her mother was standing at the door anxiously awaiting her arrival from the depot.

Not now, I thank you, returned Herbert, making a very polite bow to Mrs. E., who returned it very coldly indeed.

But I insist on your coming in, just for a few minutes, said Elizabeth, commandingly.

Well, if you insist on it, exclaimed

Charles, I'll go in for a few minutes, and in they went.

Mrs. E. was not at all pleased with her daughter's rudeness, as she termed it, for inviting Herbert into the house, knowing as she (Elizabeth) did, that her mother did not wish her to do so.

He remained, however, but a short time in Elizabeth's company, and then walked down town to Mr. Lawson's studio, to resume his favorite art once more.

As soon as Herbert had left the fair Elizabeth, her mother accosted her as she was going up stairs to her room, and said: This is the last time I wish you to be seen in Mr. Herbert's company.

Why so mother? enquired the trembling girl. What has he done to deserve this treatment from you?

I do not wish to be questioned, Miss, was her mother's pert reply, and I want you to bear in mind what I've just told you. I forbid you keeping his company; that's enough, so go to your room and reflect upon what I've been saying to you.

Elizabeth did go to her room and reflect long and seriously upon her mother's harsh and bitter remarks till the tears rolled down her pale cheeks.

Ungrateful, unfeeling mother! you know not the pangs of grief and sorrow, which your bitter words had caused to dwell in that fond, susceptible and loving heart. You know not the fine texture of that golden chord which bound two hearts as one. You know not that you were robbing your daughter of health, hope, and happiness. Or if you did know it, you gave it not a serious thought. Your object was wealth without love, and aristocracy without heart. Proud, obdurate, self-willed, heartless woman, thy pride and vanity will yet have a fall, and those whom you now count your dear friends shall become your bitter enemies.

It was Mrs. Edmonds' greatest wish that her daughter should, at some future day, become the wife of the wealthy simpleton Edward Simpson, and that her son Charles should marry the heartless coquette, Julia Simpson, but in these cherished and looked-for plans, she was sadly and hopelessly disappointed, as the conclusion of our story will inform you, patient reader. The old adage, which says, "Time works wonders," holds not good in this case, as our next chapter will show.

CONCLUDED FROM OUR LAST.

Afflictions.

Frankincense, when it is put into the fire, giveth the greater perfume; spice, if it be pounded, smelleth the sweeter; the earth, when it is torn up with the plow, becometh more fruitful; the seed in the ground, after frost and snow, and winter storms, springeth the ranker; the higher the vine is pruned, the graper, when it is most pressed and beaten, maketh the sweeter wine; fine gold is the better when it is cast in the fire; rough stones, when hewing, are squared and made fit for building; cloth is rent and cut that it may be made a garment; linen is washed, and wrung, and beaten, and is the fairer. These are familiar examples to show the benefit and commodity which the children of God receive by affliction. By it God washeth and scourth his congregation. "We rejoice," saith St. Paul, "in tribulations; knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; and hope maketh not ashamed." The power of God is made perfect in weakness, and all things turn unto good to them that fear the Lord.

Who are Esquires?

The present use of the distinction "Esquires" conveys not the remotest idea of its origin, or appropriation, in past ages. The esquire originated in chivalric times, when the sons of gentlemen, from the age of seven years, were brought up in the castles of superior lords—which was an inestimable advantage to the poorer nobility, who could hardly otherwise have given their children the accomplishments of their station. From seven to fourteen, these boys were called pages, or valets; at fourteen, they bore the name of esquire. They were instructed in the management of arms, the art of horsemanship, in exercises of strength and activity, so as to fit them for the tournament and the battle, and the milder glories of chivalrous gallantry. Long after the decline of chivalry, the word esquire was only used in a limited sense for the sons of peers and knights, or such as obtained the title by creation or by some other legal means. Blackstone defines esquires to be all who bear office or trust under the crown, and who are styled esquires by the king in their commissions and appointments; and being once so honored by the king with the title of esquire, they have a right to that distinction for life. With us, the term "esquire" is used by the Governor in the Commissions given to Justices of the Peace, and in accordance with the English custom might be used in addressing them or as an appendage to their names when speaking of them. These distinctions are now almost totally disregarded, and all gentlemen are generally termed esquires both in correspondence and in deeds—except solicitors and attorneys, who, in course of business, are called gentlemen.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, June 12th, 1858.

FAREWELL DISCOURSE. We learn that Rev. Frederic Augustus Whitney, having resigned the pastoral charge of the Unitarian Society in Brighton, (Mass.) preached his farewell sermon on Sunday last. It is perhaps needless to add that Rev. Mr. W. is a son of the late Rev. Peter Whitney of this town, and possesses in a great degree all the rare virtues and Christian graces which so eminently distinguished his lamented father.

APPOINTMENT. Hon. Bradford L. Wales of Randolph, has been appointed a deputy collector of the Port of Boston, in place of R. S. S. Andrews, resigned—said appointment subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. This is an excellent selection, and one justly merited, having been conferred upon an unflinching democrat, who, through good and evil times, regards principles above all other considerations, and who has no friendship for the isms that almost daily spring up in the political world.

UTAH AFFAIRS. President Buchanan has issued an admirable proclamation relative to the state of affairs in Utah territory, and particularly to the deluded followers of Brigham Young. The Boston Post truly remarks that "this interesting state paper is worthy to have emanated from the chief magistrate of this republic; and must command the approbation of every candid and patriotic citizen. It is merciful to those who yield obedience to the laws; but it is full of severity to those who see fit to go on in the path of rebellion."

SAD ACCIDENT. The Prairie Flower, a new schooner, made a pleasure excursion from Salem, on Tuesday morning last, with nearly fifty passengers, and was capsized in Broad Sound, during a thunder storm in the afternoon, and seven lives lost. The remaining passengers were rescued by several vessels to the vicinity. The passengers were invited by the owner of the schooner, and this was her first excursion.

MILITARY. The company and staff officers of the Fourth Regiment will have their annual elementary drill at Stetson Hall, in Randolph, on Tuesday and Wednesday next.

NEW ORLEANS. The news from New Orleans is that the Vigilance Committee's camp is broken up, but the organization not yet abandoned. The Mayor had ordered arrests to be discontinued, and order will probably prevail.

MORMON NEWS. St. Louis papers have received despatches from Camp Scott, which state that Governor Cummings was at that time in Salt Lake City, and that the Mormons had abandoned all idea of fighting, and were removing to other parts. This is the latest news from this Solomon portion of our country.

THE COUNTIES OF MASSACHUSETTS. This State is divided into fourteen counties, which have received but slight alterations in their territorial limits since they were incorporated, except the counties of Hampshire and Suffolk. The counties of Essex, Middlesex and Suffolk were incorporated May 10th, 1643; Hampshire, May 7, 1602; Plymouth, Bristol and Barnstable, June 2, 1625; Nantucket, June 20, 1625; Dukes, June 25, 1625; Worcester, April 2, 1731; Berkshire, April 21, 1731. Until 1793 Suffolk county included the district now known as Norfolk county which was incorporated March 26th, of the year last named. The towns of Hingham and Hull were in Suffolk till June 18, 1803, when they were annexed to Plymouth county. Hampshire, for about a hundred and fifty years, included Franklin and Hampshire counties; the former was incorporated June 24, 1811, and the latter, February 25, 1812.

FIRE. The alarm of fire about half past ten o'clock last night, was caused by the burning of an unoccupied house, situated on West street in Braintree, doubtless the work of an incendiary.

APPOINTMENT. Mr. Charles A. Howland of this town, has received the appointment of Justice of Peace for Norfolk County.

Men's and Boy's new calf, patent, and enameled leather, Congress Boots, at C. Gill & Co's.

The number of foreigners reaching the United States in the last fifteen years is nearly four millions.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY. An attempt was made, during last Thursday night, to enter the grocery store of Wymann Abercrombie, in this town. The cross bars to three of the windows were much bent and the bolts drawn into the frame, showing that considerable strength had been exerted to enter by forcing the shutters. An entrance was however gained at the outside cellar door, when the attempt was made to get into the store by cutting a hole in the inside cellar door and thus removing the bolt. They had nearly succeeded, when, doubtless alarmed from some cause, they fled without any plunder. A young man slept in a part of the building but heard no unusual noise during the night.

ICE CREAM AND SODA. These cool and refreshing luxuries may now be enjoyed at the store of P. P. Loud, on Temple street, in this town, who has made excellent arrangements to accommodate patrons. His Ice Creams are from Copeland's, in Boston, and of course must be of first quality.

REMOVAL. As will be noticed by the advertisement, D. B. Stetson has removed his Grocery and Variety store to his old stand on Washington street, in this town. Having renovated the premises and made additions to his stock, he asks a call from his numerous friends, in hopes to meet their wants quite as acceptably at his present as at his recent location.

SONS OF MALTA. This celebrated and mysterious order, says the Gloucester (Mass.) Telegraph, whose Lodges extend over the greater part of the civilized world, and whose deeds of unostentatious charity every true philanthropist must admire, recently astonished many of our good people by one of their peculiar and characteristic freaks.

Hearing of a case that called forth their feelings of benevolence and charity, that it is both the duty and the pleasure of the order to encourage, a meeting was forthwith called and a statement of the facts relating thereto, was presented to the Lodge. Without delay a wagon was at once loaded with groceries and other useful articles, a sum of money was also placed in an envelope, and the whole were immediately conveyed in the stillness of the night to a poor but worthy family.

The usual ceremonies of presentation were performed by the Grand Chancellor, and the small company who were present felt that "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The Sons of Malta have effected many charitable deeds in various parts of the country during the past year, and have by their singular creed, excited the wonder of all. It would seem that no sentiment of false pride or position fills the bosom of a true Son of Malta; he feels good will and charity towards the whole human race. The members of this great brotherhood do not delight in the benefits they mutually receive so much as in those they are able to confer upon others.

MUSTER. The Boston Herald states that it has been decided, that the First Division Massachusetts Volunteer Militia encamp this fall together as a Division. The time and place of the encampment have not been fixed upon.

In West Needham, on the 8th inst., Mrs. Mary, wife of Francis E. Clapp, formerly of this town.

In Dorchester, 8th inst., very suddenly, of dropsy of the heart, Mrs. Etta F. wife of Mr. Edward P. Nightingale, 24 years and 11 months.

The heart that God breaks with affliction's stroke,
Oft, like the flower when stricken by the storm,
Rises from earth more steadfastly to turn
Itself to Heaven, whither as a guide,
Kindly though stern, affliction still is leading—
Even to the home of endless joy and peace.

There on the borders of that better land,
Shall Pain's sharp ministry forever cease.
Then shall we bless thee, safely landed there,
And know above how good thy teachings were:
Then feel thy keenest strokes to us in love were given,
That hearts most crushed on earth, shall most rejoice in heaven.

Poetry.

Leaving and Men.

Drop, drop into the grave, Old Leaf,
Drop, drop into the grave,
Thy acorns grown, thy acorns sown,
Drop, drop into the grave,
December's tempests rave, Old Leaf,
Above thy forest grave, Old Leaf,
Drop, drop into the grave,

The birds in spring will sweetly sing,
That death alone is sad;
The grass will grow, the primrose show,
That death alone is sad;
Lament above the grave, Old Leaf,
For what has life to do with grief,
That death alone that's sad.

What then? We too have both lived through
The sunshine and the rain;
And blessed be He, to me and thee,
Who sent His sun and rain,
We've had our sun and rain, Old Leaf,
And God will send again, Old Leaf,
The sunshine and the rain.

Race after race of leaves and men,
Bloom, wither, and are gone;
As winds and waters rise and fall,
So life and death roll on;
And long as ocean heaves, Old Leaf,
And bud and fade the leaves, Old Leaf,
Will life and death roll on.

How like am I to thee, Old Leaf,
We'll drop together down;
How like art thou to me, Old Leaf,
We'll drop together down;
I'm gray, and thou art brown, Old Leaf,
We'll drop together down, Old Leaf,
We'll drop together down.

Drop, drop into the grave, Old Leaf,
Drop, drop into the grave;
Thy acorns grown, thy acorns sown,
Drop, drop into the grave,
December's tempest rave, Old Leaf,
Above thy forest grave, Old Leaf,
Drop, drop into the grave.

Unbeloved.

Like a tree beside the river
Of her life I have seen no more,
Do I lean me, mourning ever
In my love's idolatry,
And I reach out hands of blessing,
And I reach out hands of prayer,
And with passionate caring,
Waste my life upon the air.
In my ears the siren ever
Sings and smiles up in my face,
But for ever and for ever
Runs from my embrace.

Spring by spring the branches daily
Clothe themselves in tender flower;
And for her sweet sake as truly
All their fruit and fragrance shower;
But the stem with careless laughter,
Runs in merry beauty by,
And it leaves me, yearning after,
Lorn to weep, and lorn to die.
In my ears the siren ever
Sings and smiles up in my face,
But for ever and for ever
Runs from my embrace.

Scotch Argument for Marriage.

Jenny is poor, and I am poor,
Yet we will wed—so say no more;
And should the bairnies to us come,
As few that wed, do to have some,
No doubt but heaven will stand our friend,
And bread, as well as children sent;
So face the bon in farmer's yard,
To live alone she finds it hard;
I've known her weary every claw,
In search of corn among the staw;
But when in quest of mair food,
She clucks among her chirping brood,
With joy we see the self same hen,
That scratched for one, could scratch for ten.
These are the thoughts that make me willing
To take my girl without a shilling;
And for the self same reason, you see,
Jenny resolved to marry me.

Sundries.

An assembled family, as the legacy to each
was read aloud, sobbed and wished that the father had lived to enjoy his own fortune.—
At last came the bequest to his heir:—
I give my eldest son Tom a shilling to buy
a rope to hang himself with.
Would to God, said Tom, sobbing like the rest, that my poor father had lived to enjoy
it himself!

Come in, Joe, let's take a drink.
Thank you, Thomas, can't afford it.
Well, but I will pay for it.
O! I am not speaking of the money.
What then?
Loss of health and energy, moral principle,
character, peace of mind, self-respect,
and a sweet breath.

A Yankee and a Southerner were playing poker on a steambath, when the Southerner remarked:—
I haven't seen an ace for some time.
Wall, I guess you hain't, said the Yankee,
but I can tell you where they are. One of them is in your shirt sleeve there, and the other three are in the top of your boots.

Ma, what is bush? asked a little boy.
Why, dear, do you ask?
Because I asked sister Jane what made her new dress stuck out so all round, like a hoop, and she said hush!

A gentleman taking an apartment, said to the landlady,—
I assure you, madam, I never left a lodging but my landlady shed tears.
I hope, sir, said she, it was not because you went away without paying.

A shoemaker intending to be absent a few days, lampblack a single with the following, without date, nailed it upon his door:—
Will be in home in ten days from the time
you see this shingle.

Ned has run away with your wife, said
one friend to another.
Is it possible? I truly pity his misphap.

DR. S. STOCKING,
DENTAL SURGEON
No. 19 Tremont Row, (up stairs.)
Directly opposite the head of Brattle Street,
BOSTON.

CONTINUES to perform all operations on
the teeth, such as filling, setting, cleansing,
regulating, and extracting, on such terms as
make his services accessible to all. Having carefully selected, from the great mass of what are called modern improvements in Dentistry, whatever is of real value; and combining such improvements with the experience of more than twenty years of close application to the duties of the profession, he may be permitted to say
that whatever pertains to the dental profession,
whether mechanical or surgical, he is fully competent to perform. To do justice, and give satisfaction in all cases that come under the supervision of a dentist, though often attended with
some difficulty, should be the aim and study of
all who assume the responsibility of the care of
the teeth; and the failure of so many in accomplishing what they promise, though honest in their intentions, and uniting in their efforts,
must be attributed, either to their ignorance of
the principle upon which dental operations are
based, or the want of experience and ingenuity
to apply them. Take, for instance, the nice operation of plugging a tooth—a process of
great apparent simplicity, yet it is the most difficult of execution, and important in its consequences, of any within the range of operative
dentistry. So true is this, that not more than
one in twenty who belong to the profession, is qualified to fill a tooth. And so too, with setting teeth, especially whole and half sets, where sound taste and sound judgment are required
in combination with skill in mechanism. There
is, however, still another item embraced in the
qualifications and services of the dentist, of important importance, which is called for at the present day, in administering comfort for the removal of teeth. The natural teeth may be improperly filled, and even removed—artificial ones
may be badly set, and fail to answer the purpose for which they were made; but neither life
nor health is thereby endangered. Not so with the extraction of teeth. It is an agent
that should be confined to the care and control
of intelligent men, who have learned its peculiarities and effects on the human system. The
use of a sponge or cloth in its administration,
though a little more convenient for the administrator, is not, by any means, the best method.
ETHER should be so administered as to prevent
the air once breathed from entering the lungs a second time. The reason for this has its foundation in the laws of chemical combination in the process of respiration. The natural consequence
of inhaling ether over and over again, from a
sponge held over the mouth and nose, is to produce more or less of nausea, vomiting and faintness; if nothing worse, during etherization, with a distressing headache, faintness, and extreme lassitude, for many hours after. All these effects, however, are almost entirely obviated by
the INHALING APPARATUS used by Dr.
Stocking, who gives especial attention to the administration of ether for the removal of teeth,
preparatory to the setting of whole and half sets.

By the use of the new preparation of Crysta
Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay,
and partially saved, but verily restored to the form, comfort and utility of the natural teeth.
By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by
peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulveru-
lent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as cane. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore
its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their attention to the care and preservation of the teeth of
children and adults, and the result of their long
experience in cases requiring the opinion of
practical scientific dentists.

CHAPTER XIII.

Five long and weary years is supposed to have elapsed since Herbert and Phebe Ulrich parted with Charles and Elizabeth Edmonds. But they were years of changing events; years of clouds, mingled with sunshine and deep, heart-felt sorrow.

Mr. Edmonds's business prospered wonderfully, and his son Charles was now an able advocate at the New York bar, and gave evidence of his future bright career. But notwithstanding all this there was a dark cloud hanging over the mansion of Mr. Edmonds. The once lovely and light-hearted Elizabeth, had become pale, careworn and emaciated; for that slow, but steady monster, consumption, was wearing away her queenly form, and was pressing upon her broken heart.

The services of the best physician of the metropolis was procured; but alas! they could not heal that dying, withering heart, nor restore the rose-color to her wan and sunken cheeks. Her sunken and glassy eyes, denoted the sad feelings of her weary and pent-up soul, and she languished to rest in the quiet grave, where the weary are at rest.

Her medical advisers as a last resort, suggested to Mr. Edmonds that a tour to the genial clime of sunny Italy, would perhaps, partially if not wholly restore her to her former health and spirits, and Mr. E. assured them that he would comply with their urgent wishes at once.

Mr. Edmonds gave up the charge of his vast business to his head clerk in whom he reposed the utmost confidence, and who was familiar with Mr. E.'s business, customers, and banker as he was himself, for he was ten years in his establishment.

Accordingly the family lost no extra time in preparing themselves for their contemplated voyage across the sea.

Charles thought of remaining at his profession, but Elizabeth would not consent to have him remain in New York, and insisted upon his going with the family. After a little entreaty, however, he made up his mind so to do, much to the gratification of his sister and parents.

The faithful servants Dennis O'Brien and John Long, the coachman, were authorized to take good care of the mansion, horses, carriages, etc., etc., which they promised faithfully to do. Dennis would have felt quite happy had Mr. Edmonds taken with him John Long and left him Mary, but Miss Edmonds would not give her up, or have her remain behind, being her confiding friend and faithful servant for years past. Dennis consoled himself, however, with the hope that soon as the family would return from Europe he would propose himself in marriage to Mary, and see whether or no she would accept of him as her future husband and protector. Dennis was very economical, and saved quite a snug little sum for a "rainy day," which he had safely stowed away in the bank; nor was Mary less prudent than Dennis, for she too saved the greater part of her earnings, as a sensible girl should do.

Four or five days on the salt water revived the health of Elizabeth far beyond the expectations of her parents, but yet there was a melancholy sadness in her noble and expressive face which told too plainly that her heart was ill at ease. Ah, her mind and thoughts were far, far away, and were buried with the past; for she thought of her, who was dearer to her than life itself. The image of Herbert Ulrich was always uppermost in her heart, but where was he now; where could he have vanished to, or what had become of him? were questions which Elizabeth could not solve or divine.

Louis Lawson, the celebrated painter with whom Herbert studied for nearly two years, became involved in debt, and poverty claimed him for her own. The wife of his heart sickened and died, which cast a gloom, dark and dreary over his bright and immortal genius that followed him to his grave; and but two months had passed since her death ere he joined her sainted soul in heaven. This was a heavy blow indeed for Herbert. It filled to overflowing his cup of grief, and he knew not which way to turn his wandering steps.

He finally concluded never again to trouble his good friend Mr. Edmonds, who had done so much for him already. He therefore concluded within himself to visit his sister in Baltimore. He put his resolve into execution, and bade adieu to New York with the expectation of never seeing it again.

Upon his arrival in Baltimore he lost no time in repairing to the splendid residence of Watson Sinclair, where lived his sister Phebe, but imagine his surprise when told by a stout, robust looking man, that all the Sinclair family had left home five days before, for a summer tour of two months at Niagara Falls and Newport, and that Miss Ulrich accompanied the family.

Herbert was not prepared to hear this unexpected news, but he bore this disappointment with fortitude, and directed his steps towards the nearest hotel he could find; for it was growing late and he felt tired and weary after his long and weary ride. When he arrived at the hotel, he asked the clerk if he could accommodate him for the night, and upon being answered in the affirmative, he wrote his name in the register, and the clerk showed him in to supper, to which he done ample justice.

When Herbert placed his name upon the hotel register, he was startled by a note pinned to the door of his room, which he looked at him very attentively. He looked at the bold signature, which the weary Herbert had dashed off in a hurry, but to be doubly sure he uncased his gold spectacles and placed them on his nose, and he was then sure that he had made no mistake, or could not have been deceived in the name before him.

Your name is Herbert Ulrich, is it not? asked the elderly gentleman of Herbert, as he was about stepping into the reading room.

That is my name sir, replied our hero, who was not a little surprised at the man's enquiry and abruptness of manner.

Herbert and the strange gentleman sat down and had a long conversation with each other, which lasted over an hour.

Dear uncle, said Herbert, how glad I am to see you after an elapse of ten long years.

Yes, the strange gentleman was none other than Mrs. Ulrich's brother, (the brave and true sea captain), that she longed so much to see, and which had brought her and children to New York years before, (as the reader is already aware,) but on her arrival in the great city, she was informed by his neighbor that he had just sailed for the East Indies. Our young hero related to his uncle all that had transpired in his family since he last visited them ten years before, when he lived happy and contented in the beautiful little village of G—, in the State of Maine.

Herbert's uncle was in Baltimore over a month and he had lost all traces of his sister's family, and did not even know that his beautiful niece Phebe was all that time in the same city, and within a half dozen blocks of where he boarded. He was to sail for Havre, France, as soon as a fair wind would turn in his favor, for his beautiful ship—of which he was the proud owner—had her rich cargo and crew all on board, and the clearance papers in his pocket.

He told Herbert that he would take him from Havre, and that he would send him from thence to Italy, where he could complete his studies and see the great master-pieces of the far-famed, immortal Roman and Grecian painters and sculptors.

Herbert very readily and thankfully accepted his uncle's generous offer, and then wrote a long and beautiful letter to his sister, informing her of his future hopes and aspirations.

On his arrival in Havre his uncle provided him with money enough to live very comfortably in the Eternal city for one year, and at the expiration of that time he was to receive another sum, and so continue until his studies would have been completed.

Herbert had a sad, "God bless you uncle," to his then best friend on earth, and left him with a heart overflowing with a grief, which was truly affecting.

His uncle promised him that on his return to Baltimore, he would settle down for life and take Phebe his niece for his house-keeper and pet. His wife was dead a little over a year, and being a widower, and having two lovely children to live for, he thought and hoped that his declining years would glide softly down the rough waves of time, with Phebe for a consoler, daughter, and guide.

But man proposes and God disposes; and such alas! was it, in this case. There was a dark fate before the brave old sea captain which was to blast forever his then bright hopes! It was to be his last voyage upon the fierce waters of old Neptune, and true, too true alas! it was his last eventful voyage. Oh, why is it, that man, with all his noble and God-like qualities, is ever doomed here upon earth to have his brightest hopes and choicest anticipations blasted, blighted, and crushed beneath time's devastating foot!

Why is it that genius, immortal and sublime, is ever doomed to disappointment and sorrow—why is it, that when the bright dawn of inspiration fills the heart and soul of heroic youth, that we find the dark and dreary clouds of sorrow, grief, and woe, reserved behind the golden hues of early morn, to envelope him at eve in their thick and massive folds? Answer ye, whose crushed spirits were here below, have drank deep of the sorrowful and bitter cup, and who now find a better, brighter, sweeter home in realms beyond the glittering stars! Answer ye, winds and waves, whose vigils never cease, whose wild, sad music is created by God's lightest and angeliest breath—answer ye suns, moons and planets above, who have watched since the world first commenced moving upon its huge, gigantic axes! Aye, echo say—Why, why, why? Answer, answer, answer!

But I will not keep you, reader, in tedious suspense, and so, without further moralizing, I will to my subject at once.

Herbert has now spent one year in Rome, where he met with the greatest success, and succeeded far beyond his own expectations in his profession, but his funds were low and his wardrobe scant, which was a sore trial to him. He wrote a letter to his uncle and sister in Baltimore, but to his great surprise he received no answer from either of them. His tutor encouraged him on for months and months, telling him he would get his remittance ere long from his uncle, and that by and by all would be well with him.

By the assistance of a distinguished American artist, who had spent many years in Italy, he was enabled to continue his study a little longer, and at last finding that Herbert was without money and friends, he very generously invited him to his own lodgings and offered him the free use of his studio, which was readily accepted by our hero.

Poor Herbert wrought early and late with his brushes and paints, for he was now free to work for himself, but despondency and gloom clouded his once glowing hopes. He came to the conclusion in his own mind, that his uncle had forgotten him, and that his sister Phebe had given him up forever. His thoughts often wandered back to the New World, where he had spent many happy days, nor did he forget her whose sweet and beaming face was ever before his vacant gaze. So he came to the final conclusion, also, that Elizabeth Edmonds had by this time forgotten him, nor did he expect, (circumstances considered,) anything else from her. But, oh! he could not forget her or banish her forever from his heart. Ah, no! he loved her still, as in former years, and he would love her till he drew his latest breath. His was an ardent heartfelt love, that time nor distance, nor poverty, could ever change or alter.

Day and night, early and late, he could have been seen patiently toiling in his studio, or rather, his friend's studio. Paler and paler grew his sunken cheek, duller and duller grew his flashing eyes, and fainter and fainter became his drooping spirits. His last final picture was nearly completed. It was the portrait of a beautiful young lady just blooming into womanhood.

One, but one touch more, exclaimed the enthusiastic Herbert to himself, and then 'twill be finished!

'Twill be finished will it, responded his friend, whom we will call Augustus Perkins, Beautiful! grand! superb! exclaimed Mr. P., as he riveted his eyes first on the picture and then upon Herbert.

'Ah, you flatter me, sir, said our hero, but I am sorry, he continued, that this poor painting does not flatter the one it is made to represent; and I've a half a mind to draw the brush over it again.

Not for the world, sir, replied Mr. Perkins, I'll buy it of you, and—Why, what is the matter, Herbert, you are unwell; and Mr. P. raised him from the floor where he had fallen whilst he was speaking to him.

Herbert could not answer him, for he was too weak and feeble, and his whole frame trembled like an aspen leaf. A conveyance was procured and he was taken to his lodgings and medical aid was sent for.

Poor Herbert lingered for a few weeks, and when his physician informed him that he would be well by and by, he answered:

Yes, doctor, I will soon be well and happy, up there, with my dear parents, and he closed his eyes, and his lips began to move, as if invoking God to hasten on the looked for hour.

What news now, doctor? enquired Mr. Perkins, is there any hope of his recovery? Not the slightest hope whatever, sir, was the melancholy reply; but I encouraged him all that I possibly could. His life, poor fellow is short.

I am sorry to hear it, sir, responded Mr. Perkins. And so am I too, sir, returned the doctor. But, I had almost forgotten, Herbert wishes to see you immediately. I will call again in half an hour.

Very well, doctor, replied Mr. Perkins, and bidding the physician good morning, he went to see the dying Herbert.

Did you send for me, Herbert? asked Mr. P., taking him by the hand.

I—I did—sir, was the faint answer. Here—I feel—that I'm dying, and—I want you to—grant me—one—request.

Name it, my dear young friend, name it, said Mr. Perkins, and if God spares me I'll do it.

Lift up my head—there, gently—so—I feel better now. You told me, he continued, that you intended to visit your home in the New World in May next.

I have told you so, Herbert, replied Mr. P., kindly. Can I do anything for you there?

A great deal, sir. Raise my head—a little higher—so—thanks. Take this ring off my finger—'tis a diamond ring—and when you arrive in New York—give it to—my friend Miss Elizabeth Edmonds, No.—Fifth Avenue—she gave it me—years ago, when—she'll remember it, also—do I ask too much of you?

Also, resumed Herbert, please to present her with—my last—feeble effort—that picture.

I shall most willingly do so, said Mr. P. Is there anything else you would wish me to do for you? Tell me.

No—yes—one thing more—tell her, I—I thought of her—in my dying moments—and loved—

He could say no more. His soul took its flight to a better world. Herbert Ulrich was no more.

CHAPTER XIV.

The great city of Rome was alive with English and American tourists who had come thither, some for pleasure and others for the restoration of their health, and invitations were sent to many of them, particularly to the Americans, to attend the funeral of the ill-fated young artist.

We are invited to attend the funeral of a young American artist, said Mr. Edmonds, to his wife, who was then engaged in reading A Tour Through Europe.

Who is he, or what is his name? enquired Mrs. Edmonds.

I cannot tell you his name, my dear, responded Mr. E. All I can tell you is, that I've heard he is to be buried at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Well, I'll be ready, dear, replied Mrs. E.; and she resumed her reading of A Tour Through Europe.

May I not go too, father, asked Elizabeth, coaxingly for her parent.

Yes, my daughter, responded Mr. E., if you feel strong enough. I fear you are not. Oh, I feel quite well to-day, father; was her lively response.

Well, then you may be ready to accompany us at one o'clock, remarked her father. I fear you will catch a fresh cold, my child, said Mrs. E. as she closed her book.

Oh, no, there is no danger mother, exclaimed Elizabeth, besides its a beautiful day.

At two o'clock precisely, the sad procession moved slowly on through the crooked and narrow streets of that famous city. Presently there was a halt, and the coffin was carried from the hearse to the new made grave by four Americans, and slowly was it lowered down until it rested upon its solid and sure foundation. A short prayer was said, and the sexton commenced filling up the grave, as cool and as unconcerned as though he were filling up an empty pit. I wish we could have learned his name, said Elizabeth to her father, after they had returned from the funeral.

We shall soon find that out my daughter, replied Mr. E. I got an invitation from a friend of Mr. Perkins to visit his studio to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, and there we will see some of the dead artist's paintings.

And is mother and I invited too? enquired Elizabeth of her father.

Most assuredly you are, and Charles too, I suppose.

Do you know this Mr. Perkins? asked Mrs. E. of her husband.

No. I am sorry I have not the honor of his acquaintance, replied Mr. E. But I hear that he is a native of New York city, and an artist of great merit.

The studio of Augustus Perkins was well filled with visitors the next morning after the burial of our lamented hero, and among the visitors were Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds and son, and their accomplished daughter Elizabeth whose health was very delicate and feeble and precarious. Mr. Perkins showed his visitors his large collection of paintings and then invited them into an adjoining room to see the master pieces of his late student, which rested in the same identical position where he had finished it.

There ladies and gentlemen, exclaimed Mr. P., is the finest portrait in my studio. It is the portrait of one, in America, whom the artist truly loved; and here, is still another of his pieces, which deserves great praise.

The second picture which the artist referred to was truly very beautiful, and highly finished. It defied criticism, so perfect was it in all its shades, colors, and life-like beauty. It represented the memorable and never-to-be-forgotten scene on Broadway, New York, which was quickly recognized by Mr. and Mrs. Edmonds and daughter.

Every figure was represented in vivid and glowing colors. There was strikingly portrayed the broken sleigh, the cream-colored horses, the trodden snow, the horrified parents, and most conspicuous of them all the likeness of a young and beautiful girl, presenting a ring to their deliverer, a young man whose face bore the marks of severe violence.

And this young man's name stammered Mr. Edmonds, was—

Herbert Ulrich! exclaimed Mr. Perkins. Gracious Heavens! is it possible! ejaculated Elizabeth, and ere a minute elapsed she was seated beside her own portrait.

The visitors looked around in astonishment for they did not know the cause of this sudden change.

But Mr. Edmonds soon explained the whole matter, and Mr. Perkins then and there told them the last words and wishes of Herbert. The key was found which unlocked the door of mystery, and Mrs. Edmonds, who was weeping bitter tears over her daughter, saw her fully when it was too late.

Elizabeth Edmonds lived but ten days after this sad occurrence, and her last and dying wish was that the ring she gave Herbert and which Herbert gave to her, should be buried with her in the grave. One wish more, reader, did she exact from her parents, and brother Charles, and that was that she wished to rest forever by Herbert Ulrich's side under the sunny sky of balmy Italy.

A costly monument was placed over the remains of the devoted lovers by Mr. Edmonds, which bore an appropriate inscription and spoke in the highest praise of the departed couple, who were separated from each other while here on earth, but who were now rejoicing in each other's company in Heaven. The Edmonds family were three long months in Italy previous to Herbert's death, but yet, strange to say, they never met or heard of him.

Mr. Edmonds remained in Europe longer than he expected, because he found that it improved his daughter's health; but imagine his surprise when he arrived in New York, after an absence of one year, that he found out to his sorrow that he was a ruined merchant. His head clerk, in whom he placed the most implicit confidence, had run away with his ready cash and no trace could be found of him. A terrible fire consumed his splendid store and changed it into a heap of ruins, and to crown the awful climax the insurance policy ran out one week before the fire occurred.

The faithful servants, Dennis O'Brien and John Long, proved themselves good and true, and they received their reward afterwards. Mr. Edmonds became insane and died in an insane asylum three months after his arrival in New York city.

Dennis O'Brien and Mary became one flesh, one year after the death of Mr. Edmonds, and he continued in the old mansion with Mrs. E. and her son Charles; and John Long still retained his post of coachman in the family.

Miss Julia Simson married a half-breed and half-man sort of a fellow, a Spaniard by birth, who prided himself more on his long curly hair and moustaches than brains and common sense. He loved fast men, fast horses, and fast ladies.

Edward Simson, her brother, slept fast, ate fast, drank fast, gambled fast, and didn't care for any one, nor no one cared for him.

He became one of the fast young men about town, and that was the height of his earthly ambition.

Mrs. Edmonds dear friend's were now no where to be found; they gave her up as a lost sheep in the desert. They could spare time to visit her years ago, when she dashed in splendor by them in her superb equipage, but now that fortune frowned upon her the light of their countenances was withdrawn from her forever.

Alas! such is life! such is earthly love in this world of ups and downs, clouds and shadows.

The brave old captain Ulrich, Herbert's uncle, lost his ship and cargo, coming from Liverpool to the port of Boston, and he himself in attempting to jump into the ship's boat at the time, was drowned and his body was never recovered.

And Charles Edmonds resumed his profession at the bar. He still lives in his father's mansion on Fifth Avenue, and he is as happy as this earth can make him. Now kind reader, let us take a last look together ere we part, at that happy little group as they sit around the blazing coal fire in the polished grate.

That pale faced intellectual man, who sits in the large easy chair, playing with that black-eyed, curly haired little girl, is Charles Edmonds, now the master and owner of the good old homestead; and that beautiful, fascinating and accomplished woman on his left, who is playing with that blue-eyed, fun-making boy is his fond and loving wife, Phebe Ulrich, that was, but Mrs. Charles Edmonds that is. The little boy is called Herbert Ulrich after his uncle, and the little girl is called Elizabeth after her aunt, whose likeness at her age she very much resembled.

Suspended from the walls are the two priceless pictures of Elizabeth Edmonds and the catastrophe on Broadway, which Mr. Perkins presented to Mr. Edmonds before he left Rome.

Such a matronly lady, with grayish hair and such a beautiful smile, and such a graceful objection now to her son Charles keeping the company of one whom she would not have tolerated or endured years before. But she has learned a sad lesson by this time, and has become a changed, devoted, sensible, Christian woman; and the kind and forgiving Phebe loves her as a mother, and forgives her for her past misdeeds and divers faults.

This ends my story; and now reader, for the last time, farewell! hoping, at the same time, that you will not forget the moral contained in The Ruined Merchant, or, A Wife's Extravagance.

Impure Air.

Whatever makes the air impure makes the blood impure. It is the air we breathe which purifies the blood. And, as if the water we use to wash our clothing is dirty, it is impossible to wash the clothing clean, so, if the air we breathe is impure, it is impossible for it to abstract the impurities of the blood. What, then, are some of the prominent things which render the air impure? It is the nature of still water to become impure. It is the nature of still air to become impure. Running water purifies itself. Air in motion, draughts of air, are self purifiers. Thus it is that the air of a close room becomes impure inevitably. Hence all rooms should be so constructed as to have a constant draught of air passing through them. A man of ordinary size, renders a hoghead of air unfit for breathing and consumes its blood purifying qualities every hour. Hence, sleeping in close rooms, even though alone, or sitting for a short time in a crowded vehicle, or among a large assembly, is perfectly corrupting to the blood. Close bed-rooms make the graves of multitudes.

Facts About Phosphorus.

It is now just two hundred years since phosphorus was first obtained by Brand, of Hamburg. So wonderful was the discovery then considered, that Kraft, an eminent philosopher of the day, gave Brand three hundred dollars for the secret of its preparation. Kraft then travelled, and visited nearly all the courts of Europe, exhibiting. Phosphorus resembles beeswax; but it is more transparent, approaching to the color of amber. Its name, which is derived from the Greek, signifies "light bearer," and is indicative of its most distinguishing quality, being self-luminous. Phosphorus, when exposed to the air, shines like a star, giving out a beautiful, lambent, greenish light. Phosphorus dissolves in warm sweet oil. If this phosphorized oil be rubbed over the face in the dark, the features assume a ghastly appearance, and the experimentalist looks like a veritable living Will-o'-the-Wisp. The origin of phosphorus is the most singular fact concerning it. Every other substance with which we are acquainted, can be either traced to earth or air; but phosphorus seems to be of animal origin. Of all animals, man contains the most; and of the various parts of the body, the brain yields, by analysis, more phosphorus than any other. This fact is of no little moment. Every thought has, perhaps, a phosphoric source. It is certain that the most intellectual beings contain the most phosphorus. It generally happens that when a single discovery is made, many years elapse before any application of it is made to the welfare and happiness of man. This remark applies to phosphorus.—Johnstone's Chemistry.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Free Bridges and Turnpikes.

On Monday last the County Commissioners met at the Hancock House pursuant to order of notice published in our columns in relation to the petition made to them respecting the freedom of the Weymouth and Braintree Turnpike and the Neponset Bridge. The meeting was fully attended. The Chairman of the County Commissioners, Mr. Safford, stated the object of the meeting, and that the orders of notice on the several towns and corporations had been complied with, and that the Commissioners were then ready to hear the parties upon the subject. Wm. S. Morton, Esq., in behalf of the petitioners spoke at some length in favor of the project and detailed the great advantages which would accrue to Quincy, Weymouth, Braintree, and other towns on the same line of travel whenever a free avenue was opened to Boston. In closing he alluded to the venerable Josiah Quincy, not as one bowed down by the weight of age, but rather as one buoyed up and invigorated by the intelligence and judgment which belong to four score years of industry and experience, who had come to lead his influence to the success of the undertaking.

Mr. Quincy after concurring with the previous speaker in regard to the great importance of the undertaking, gave an interesting account of the original formation of the corporation, of which he was president, and the difficulties which were encountered in the prosecution of the project. He stated that the corporation to dispose of their franchise, added that he would do all he could to bring about a result which he had so long and so ardently desired, and which he trusted he should yet live to see accomplished.

Mr. Eaton, one of the Selectmen of Dorchester, said a few words, not against the freedom of the bridge, but that Dorchester having had many burdens to bear, he hoped that in acting for the public good in this section the Commissioners would not forget the new roads and bridges that Dorchester had already to maintain.

Braintree was represented by her Selectman, and though not wishing to have to support the bridge over the Monaquet river, expressed himself as very desirous to have a free avenue to Boston.

Weymouth, by her Selectmen and other prominent citizens urged the measure very strongly, and Mr. Wales said that although the town had taken no formal vote upon the matter, yet he did not believe there was a man in Weymouth that would not give the measure his hearty approval. Mr. Kingsbury's views coincided with those of Mr. Wales, and he gave his opinions as to what the advantage of removing the tolls from Braintree and Weymouth Turnpike would be to the towns of Braintree and Weymouth.

A gentleman who appeared for Braintree and Weymouth Corporation, said that they were prepared to sell their franchise so soon as suitable terms could be agreed upon, and apprehended no difficulty upon that score. Other gentlemen gave the project their decided approval.

From the feeling exhibited in the matter there seems to be little doubt that the prayer of the petitioners will be granted, and we hope that a long period will not elapse before we shall have the opportunity and the privilege of congratulating our citizens that a taxed road will not be a bar to their pleasure or business intercourse with the metropolis of New England.

FIRE IN BOSTON. A large fire occurred in Boston, on Saturday night last, in Milk Street, by which considerable property was damaged and destroyed. The Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company sustained no loss, as falsely stated in some of the papers.

CUCUMBERS. An agricultural paper states that when a cucumber is taken from the vines, let it be cut with a knife, leaving about the eighth of an inch of the cucumber on the stem, then slit the stem with a knife from its end to the vine, leaving a small portion of the cucumber on each division, and on each separate slit there will be a new cucumber as large as the first. Those wishing to raise large quantities of this article for pickles, will do well to try the experiment.

INCENDIARISM. On Thursday morning last, about two o'clock, the east wing of the Athorp House, in this town, was discovered to be on fire, having been set on the outside, near the street. It was slightly damaged. The main body of the house is occupied by several Irish families.

We have been informed that an attempt was made, on Tuesday night last, to fire the Railroad Depot, in the south part of this town. From the damp state of the weather, it doubtless went out before doing much damage. A family reside in a part of the building.

THE SEARCH QUESTION. Orders have been given to the British Admiral on the West India station, to put a stop to the system of overhauling American vessels in the Gulf and in the ports of Cuba.

CONGRESS. The final adjournment of Congress took place on Monday evening last at six o'clock, both Houses having extended the session to that hour. The various Appropriation bills were signed by the President. In respect to the Post-Office Appropriation, the Senate receded from its amendments, and the bill passed without abolishing the franking privilege, and without raising letter postage from three cents to five.

Congress, during its session, passed fifty-two general acts, twenty-six joint resolutions, and any number of private acts for the relief of individuals.

Oregon remains out of the Union until next session, and the territories of Dakota, Arizona and Nevada, still remain unrecognized.

ANOTHER MARKET HOUSE. Frederic Wilson has just opened, for the present, in the basement of Johnson's Building, a Provision Store, where he will keep the best quality of meats, poultry, a general assortment of vegetables, and all other articles usually found in such places. Judging from the looks of things, with the industry and enterprise of Mr. Wilson, we feel assured that his articles will not only please the eyes but suit the taste of purchasers. With good things and the best the market affords at all seasons of the year, and an earnest desire to meet all wants, he merits a generous encouragement.

He will soon remove to the adjoining building, which is now being prepared for the purpose. REAL ESTATE SALE. It will be noticed by the advertisement in another column, that the "Pray Estate," so called for many years, will be offered at auction on Thursday next. Mr. Marsh, the present owner, has made many improvements, thus adding to the beauty of the place, and making it one of the most desirable residences to be found within so short a distance of Boston.

For the Patriot.
Safe Keeping of Books, &c.

Mr. Editor:—We are gratified to see by the Laws and Resolves passed by the last Legislature, an act for the preservation of Books, Reports, and Laws, received from the Commonwealth. This is a law that has long been needed, especially in this town, where for years, aye, from the time the town was incorporated important and valuable books and documents have been allowed to be scattered over all parts of the town, and many of them through this neglect have been lost; this was a necessary consequence under the circumstances, as the town had made no provision for their safe keeping; and even if the town officers were changed, especially the Clerk to whom the books and documents are consigned, when he leaves his official position deposits the laws, &c., in the most convenient place, or if he has not received them, let them remain with the former town Clerk, knowing not what else to do with them. We hope now to see as suitable a cabinet or book-case procured for them as the town in their bountiful generosity furnished for the Adams Library, a library the town has no use or control of; it having been given expressly for the use of the Academy, it is under the direction and surveillance of a board of supervisors appointed by the testator; excepting the expense of keeping it, which the town know too well.

In this room the town Books ought to be kept, as there is ample accommodation, and not the Selectmen's department, as it is now too much crowded to admit of any further additions. We expect to see these Books and Reports placed in a neat and convenient manner in this room, the only suitable locality for the archives of the town. For the further consideration of the law by the public we will give it in full, as follows, viz:

Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of the city government of the several cities, and of the selectmen of the several towns of this Commonwealth, to provide at the expense of such cities and towns, some suitable cabinet or book-case, for the safe preservation of such books, reports and laws, as said cities and towns may receive from the Commonwealth.

Sec. 2. For every month that any city or town shall neglect to fulfil the requirements of this act, it shall forfeit and pay the sum of ten dollars, one-half of which penalty shall be paid to the complainant, and one-half to the Commonwealth.

Sec. 3. For every month that any city or town shall neglect to fulfil the requirements of this act, it shall forfeit and pay the sum of ten dollars, one-half of which penalty shall be paid to the complainant, and one-half to the Commonwealth.

CLASS DAY AT HARVARD. Friday, June 25th, will be class day at Harvard College. The exercises will consist of music, prayer, by Rev. Dr. Huntington, oration by Henry Brooks Adams son of Hon. Charles Francis Adams of this town, poem by George Washington Copp Noble, of Somersworth, N. H., and an ode by William Gilchrist Gordon, of New Bedford, Mass.

WOLFE'S CELEBRATED
Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps.

THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured
by the proprietor, at Schiedam, Holland,
expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own factory. It is pure Tincture of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose merciful extract is distilled and rectified with
its spirituous solvent, which thus becomes a
concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and
aroma, altogether transcending in its cordial
and medicinal properties to any alcoholic
stimulant now made in the world. It is now
prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in
the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout,
Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints.

Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases
of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen
pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

UDOLPHO WOLFE,
Sole Manufacturer and Importer,
Depot 22 Beaver St., New York.

The Proprietor takes the liberty of referring to the following Physicians in the Eastern States, who have used the Schnapps in their practice.

Poetry.

Daily Work.

Who lags from dread of daily work,
And his appointed task would shirk,
Commits a folly and a crime;
A poltroon slave—
A clog upon the wheels of time,
With work to do, and store of health,
The man is unworthy to be free,
Who will not give,
That he may live,
His daily toil for daily fee.

No! let us work! We only ask
Reward proportioned to our task;
We have no quarrel with the great—
No feud with rank—
With mill or bank—
No envy of a lord's estate.
If we can earn sufficient store
To satisfy our daily need
And can retain
For age and pain,
A fraction; we are rich indeed.

No dread of oil have we or care,
We know our worth, and weigh our powers;
The more we work the more we win;
Success to trade!
And to the corn that's coming in!
And joy to him who o'er his task
Remembered toil is sowing plan;
Who, working, thinks,
And never sighs
His independence as a man!

Who only asks for humble wealth,
Enough for competence and health;
And leisure when his work is done
To read his book,
Or stroll at setting of the sun;
Who toils as every man should toil,
For fair reward, erect and free:
These are the men—
The best of men—
These are the men we mean to be.

The Father is Coming.

The clock is on the stroke of six,
The father's work is done;
Sweep up the hearth and mend the fire,
And put the kettle on;
The wild night wind is blowing cold,
'Tis dreary crossing o'er the wold.

He's crossing o'er the wold again,
He's stronger than the wind that blows;
He does not feel the cold, nor he,
His heart it is so warm.
For father's heart is stout and true,
As ever human bosom knew.

He makes all toil, all hard-ship, light—
Would all men were the same,
So ready to be pleased, so kind,
So very hard to blame.
Folk need not be austere, austere,
For love hath reader will not fear.

Stay do not close the shutter, child,
For far along the lane
The little window looks, and he
Can see it shining plain;
I've heard him say he loves to mark
The cheerful firelight through the dark.

And we'll do all that father likes,
His wishes are so few—
Would they were more! that every hour
Some wish of his I knew!
I'm sure it makes a happy day,
When I can please him any way.

I know he's coming by this sign
That baby's almost wild;
See how he laughs, and crows, and stares,
Heaven bless the merry child!
He's father's self in face and limb,
And father's heart is strong in him!

Hark! hark! I hear his footsteps now—
He's through the garden gate,
And do not let him wait!
Shout, baby, shout! and clap thy hands,
For father on the threshold stands.

Fame.

Clad with moss of gathering years,
The stone of fame shall moulder down,
Long dried from soft affection's tears,
Its place unheeded and unknown.

Ah! who would strive for fame that flies
Like smoke before the gale?
Renown but breathes before it dies—
A meteor's path! an idiot's tale!

Beneath retirement's sheltered wing,
From mad conflicting clouds remote,
Beneath some grove encircled spring,
Let wisdom build your humble cot.

There clasps your fair one to your breast,
Your eyes in tears and with transport's tear,
By turns caressing and caress—
Your infant prattlers sporting near.

Content your humble head shall dress,
And poverty shall guard your door—
Of wealth and fame if you have less Than monarchs, you of bliss have more.

Anecdotes.

Massa says you must certain pay de bill to day, says a negro to a New Orleans shop keeper.

Why, he isn't afraid I'm going to run away, is he? was the reply.
Not exactly dat, but look ahen, said the darkey, slyly and mysteriously, he's gwine to run a way hesself, and darfor wants to make a big raise!

I am absolutely afraid, said an extravagant nobleman, that I shall die a pauper.
At the rate you go on, replied the lawyer, I am afraid you will live one.

It is related that a lady made a complaint to Frederick the Great, King of Prussia.
Your Majesty, said she, my husband treats me badly.

That is none of my business, replied the King.
But he speaks ill of you, said the lady.
That replied he, gravely, is none of your business.

Waiting for Dead Men's Shoes.

Here we are, bag and baggage, baby and all come to spend the day with you, said little Mrs. Grey to her friend Cora Lincoln, as she entered her parlor, one cold November morning, and seated herself by the fire with the air of one quite at home.

I am right glad to see you, though you've caught us all in a muss—boiling cider, baking and ironing; but you'll make due allowance for our appearance, I know; and we can wait and work too. Bless its little soul! here's the little gem right in the heart of this big bundle. Come to, auntie, darling, I'm so glad you brought him! And the clocks and hounds were speedily removed; and the two friends sat down to chat over all that had transpired in each family during the two weeks of their separation, for the weather had been so unpleasant that they had been obliged to make their visits less frequent of late.

Little Willie had a new tooth, a new dress, and a pair of new gaiters. Mrs. Grey had been to see Bessie Bird's new baby. Mrs. Lincoln had a new bird girl; and her brother James had just returned home from a visit to the east, and had brought her a present of a new silk dress, which was much admired by both ladies. Both joined in their approval of the latest fashions, and in enthusiastic praises of the new minister. And, when all the news had been discussed, Cora ran out to see what Biddy was about in the kitchen; while her visitor amused herself by looking over the last number of the Lady's Book; and Master Willie found employment in entangling cord, thread, pins, hooks and eyes, worsted, &c., in a promiscuous pile, from Auntie Lincoln's workbasket.

You little rogue! exclaimed Cora, as she re-entered the room.

Why, Willie? what have you done? was Mrs. Grey's first expression, as she sprang to the child to undo the mischief.

Never mind, Jenny, said Cora, laughing. Just let him have that snarl of worsted; its bright colors please him; and I never get time to embroder any now-a-days. I don't see how in the world you find time to do so much, besides your housework. Why, here I keep a girl in the kitchen, and hire nearly all my sewing done! and yet it's always drive! drive! here from early dawn till late at night. Do tell me your secret.

I'm sure I don't know what should make the difference. You was brought up to work as well as I; but you have a larger house to take care of, and more company than I ever want; and the more help you have, the more you have to see to. I rather think we both of us do enough.

I am sure I am never idle. Harry works like a slave and never gets any time to spend with his family, or to visit with friends, as your husband; but I look forward to a time when we shall be able to live more at ease. I trust it will not always be so.

Jenny Grey had taken her work from her pocket, and was busy plying her needle. A placid smile rested upon her girlish brow, and made her look a perfect figure of content, as she answered: Cora, why do you place your happiness so far in the future? The happiest time is now, is my motto. Albert and I are so happy all of the time, that we hardly know what to do with ourselves; and, instead of trusting to the future to bring the ease and comfort of wealth, we only hope that it will be as bright as the present, which is full of joy. Don't you think you would be happier if you did not set so high a value upon wealth?

Oh, I don't know! We don't want to step down any from the station we began in. Perhaps if we had been less aspiring in our beginnings, it would have been just as well;

but, now we have begun, we must hold out, you know.

Perhaps so. Well, I hope you will gain the desired point, and then be at rest; but it is often the case that desire of gain, becomes a habit, and so roots itself in the heart as to sap up all the fountains of happiness there—never becoming satisfied with plenty, never finding ease, but ever striving, yearning greedily for something beyond present acquisitions. I hope it will not be so with you.

No, indeed; I do not mean to grow avaricious; I have seen enough of that; all I want is to be comfortable; but why do you smile?

I was thinking of the story of the old man and his wife. The old man wanted to get rich; but the good dame was more modest in her aspirations. She only asked to be comfortable. Years passed away; and the old man, surveying his possessions, said: I was rich long ago, but my wife is not comfortable yet.

Ha! ha! a pretty good definition of some people's ideas of comfort. But I must go and see about dinner now. Excuse me a little while; I can't trust that blundering Biddy with the plainest meals.

Albert Grey and Henry Lincoln were friends from childhood; they had shared in the same sports, attended the same schools, confided their love secrets to each other, and, during the same year, taken to themselves wives, from among the farmers' daughters of their quiet town.

Jenny Newton was the only daughter of a large family of sturdy sons. Her father had been a hard-working man, who by dint of economy and industry, had succeeded in obtaining a comfortable livelihood, and setting up his sons in business, as they one after another left the parental roof; and, when his pet, his darling Jenny, was married, the old man felt that he was fortunate in giving her what was considered by the humble neighbors a good, comfortable setting out; and the happy pair were married in the village church, and returned to their cozy little cottage, where they dwelt in quiet content, upon Albert's earnings, for he had laid by enough to purchase a few acres of land; and his own hands had constructed the neat little cottage, which Jenny declared was just the sweetest, most convenient little house in town.

Henry Lincoln was deemed most fortunate in his success at Squire Martin's. Cora was an only child; and, although her father was too avaricious to part with much of his hoarded wealth, even to bestow it upon his daughter, he must, in case of death, leave it in other hands at last; and Cora being the only heir, must necessarily reap the fruits of his hard labor and penurious savings. But Henry soon found that his was a dog's life to lead. The old Squire suffered his purse strings to relax sufficiently to give the young couple a splendid wedding party, and to furnish a house for them in a style suitable to the position they wished to take in society. But the position once established must be maintained; and Squire Martin did not feel called upon to continue his generosity, and after a few months, hardly allowed himself time to look in upon them, but delved away more diligently than ever, and grew poorer every day in his own estimation; and Henry who had taken a portion of his father-in-law's farm to work upon shares, felt himself obliged to work harder than he had ever done before, in order to please the exacting old man, who wanted none of your dainty fingered, half-sick young gentlemen in his fields.

Before his marriage, Henry had found ample employment upon his own snug little farm, which joined Squire Martin's, and which, had been allowed to sit up in accordance with his humble means and modest desires, would have made a lovely little rural home with which to begin life. But Cora would hear nothing of his boyish visions of a vine-wreathed cottage, and farming on a small scale. I shall have enough some day, you know, to warrant a different style of living, said she, and why wait till we are too old to enjoy our wealth before we have the comforts of life? And her lover could not resist her argument, for he knew that his was an enviable situation, and he thought to himself: Sure enough, Cora was just the same as owner of this fine estate; and what's the difference if her father does not give it to her now? It will all come out right. Of course we ought to support better style than people with the same capital, and no expectations. And so a great debt was incurred in the construction of a fine house; and then they must keep a horse and carriage to match, and make parties, and expend considerable in dress—in short, keep up such appearances as the world would expect them to.

But this keeping up appearances greatly annoyed Henry, who was really quite an epicure and relished true home comforts as much as his friend Albert, who really enjoyed more at his humble cottage fireside than he dared to think of in his stately mansion. But Cora insisted upon the strictest economy in every thing where display did not require a lavish hand. We will save in little things what we spend in great ones, said she. And, though her husband believed him of the homely adage, "Save at the tap, and run out at the bung," yet he wisely kept his own counsel, and meekly submitted to a seat at the kitchen fire, on a rainy day, to save a little fuel in the sitting-room, and partook in silence of the meagre fare spread upon their daily board, which Cora declared plenty good enough for every day. He did not find time to pamper envious feelings by a contemplation of the domestic enjoyments of his neighbors, for he was, as Cora truly said, always driving! driving! hardly daring to stop a moment lest the ever diligent old Squire should think him a shirk, or, what was almost disgraceful in his eyes, "a weakly chap."

Squire Martin was always well; and "he didn't believe in folks being sick—he didn't; he thought active exercise at some useful employment worth more than all your doctor stuff—he did." And poor Henry exerted himself to the utmost of his strength to keep up with the vigorous old man, who declared himself as tough as a boiled owl, and worth a score of your scientific farmers.

Having given the reader a little insight into the affairs of our two young friends, let us return to the parlor of the Lincolns, where we left Jenny Grey bending over her sewing.

I declare! said Cora, coming back from the kitchen, looking heated and flurried, I didn't think of leaving you so long! Well, we are always full of work here. I've had such a time with Biddy! I can't help laughing though at her blunders. Why, don't you believe, she went and starched the fine clothes in the pudding I had ordered for dinner.

The pudding?

Yes, Oh dear! I must laugh, and yet I am so vexed at her. I showed her the other day how to make a corn starch pudding; and this morning I told her to make one for dinner, and fold the clothes ready for ironing, and left the kitchen, promising to call again and leave further orders. When I went out again, I asked her if she had finished what I told her. Oh yes, ma'am! said she, with a most innocent look, all but the starching of the pudding. I've starched the shirts and muslin's in it, and was just going to put in the eggs and the swatening. And, when I told her that the starch for the clothes was another thing entirely, she flew into a huff, and muttered: Starch is starch; and I was only after saving a bit, sure.

How ludicrous! Does she often trouble you so? I should think she would be more of a hindrance than help.

Oh, I am tormented to pieces with her; but she is better than half the girls you can get, I couldn't possibly get along without her. I work like a drudge now! it is sweep, and dust, and clean house and wash curtains, and take up carpets and prepare for company, and do up sweetmeats, and a thousand things to do all the time, I am tired all of the time, I've work enough for two girls, but we can't afford to keep more than one.

What if you couldn't afford to keep any, and had to get along without help?

Oh, I couldn't! You can, I know; but you have a smaller house, as you said a while ago; and you don't have as much company as we do. I wouldn't own it to every one, but I don't doubt you enjoy life all the better for it. But never mind, I won't always be so. I hope to see the day when we can rest and live at our ease. Henry works hard; and I believe he will have his reward. Father is not the one to disregard all his efforts to rise in the world. I have often wondered that my father, thinking so much of wealth, did not object to my marrying Henry, whose circumstances were so moderate, but father remembers the time when he had but a dollar he could call his own. He knows how all his money came, I tell you.

And such people generally know how to keep it too, don't they?

Well, I don't know. Father never throws away money, but I don't fear but he'll do what is right by us. We intend to work hard enough to please him.

That is quite evident.

There was more of sarcasm in Jenny's tone than she intended to convey, and she almost started at the bitterness of her remark, but Cora had turned to frolic with Willie, and did not seem to heed her friend's reply.

The dinner hour arrived, and Henry excused himself after a hasty meal, saying that he was pressed with business during this season of the year.

The afternoon passed pleasantly away with the two ladies, who were, notwithstanding their different stations, warm friends, for thanks to the democracy of country society, social position draws no lines between friends. Cora was frank, affectionate and gentle, Jenny independent and plain-hearted, was always speaking her sentiments boldly, though kindly, and her friend received them as they were intended, generally agreeing with her in the main, and differing only upon some point of expedience, or a sensitive regard for the opinions of others.

Willie took his afternoon nap, and awoke refreshed, and in high spirits, ready for a frolic with papa, who came just before tea, intending to spend the evening, but Henry had barely time to snatch his supper, and excuse himself again upon the plea of business, and bidding his friend look for a long visit from him during his winter leisure, he left the house.

Mr. and Mrs. Grey concluded not to spend the evening, and with an earnest invitation to Cora to return their visit as soon as possible, they left; and Cora consulted herself, after they were gone, by sighing, Well, it won't be always so!

This looks something like it, said Albert entering his quiet setting room, after putting up his horse.

Isn't it pleasant? No place like home, after all; is there? said his smiling wife, who had kindled a bright fire in the grate, and who was just arranging a tele-at-le and workstand, upon which were a half-knit sock, a new book, a basket of apples, and a lamp before the fire.

No, indeed—no place like home—no wife like mine, was the low, earnest reply, as the fond husband drew the bright face of his young wife to his bosom, and imprinted a kiss upon her brow. I tell you Jenny, I wouldn't be in Harry Lincoln's place for ten times Cora's fortune. But! a chilly sort of an atmosphere his home is surrounded with.

Don't you think Henry is growing moody, lately? asked Jenny, as she undressed her babe, and hushed him to sleep.

Yes, moody and avaricious, like all the rest. He won't stand it long, though, to go on in this way. He never was particularly robust. Continued toil like this will wear him out. It is really painful to hear him plead poverty as an excuse for not purchasing little cheap comforts. I asked him to-day to subscribe for a magazine. Can't afford it, said he; my interest money is due; I have several little debts to meet; I find ways enough for every cent I can get hold of; I shouldn't have any time to read it if I should take it; next year, perhaps I will; but really I can't afford it now. Poor fellow! thought I. I am glad that I can afford to enjoy life as I go along, and no thanks to a father-in-law, either.

Well, I hope they'll realize their hopes of the future. One thing is certain; I don't envy them their present happiness. But come; your slippers are nicely warmed. I want to get this sock into the narrowings to-night. Let us have something more about Central America.

It was a pleasant picture of domestic happiness, that little humble parlor, with its cheerful blazing fire—the neatly swept hearth, with its tasteful rug, upon which lay stretched in a quiet doze a handsome cat—the dainty little table, with its snowy cover and bright lamp—the pictures upon the wall—the snug little book-case—Master Willie in his crib—the young proprietor of the domicile lounging at his ease, while his rich tones made music as they told page after page of the book in which both he and his listener were so deeply interested—and the young wife cosily seated near him, quietly knitting. One did not need to be told, after looking in upon the Greys at the evening fireside, that theirs was a happy lot.

Ten years had passed away. Let us take another peep at our friends. We shall not find them at the cottage, though it still retains its rustic beauty, and nestles down among the vines and surrounding shrubbery as cosily as ever; but the gardener lives there now; and if you ask for the residence of Mr. Grey, you will be directed to a large stone mansion at a little distance, in the midst of carefully kept grounds, covered with choice shrubbery and rare flowers, most of which however, have taken warning from the autumn winds, and folded themselves within their brown coats beneath the ground, awaiting a more congenial atmosphere as a signal for coming out again.

From small beginnings, Albert Grey has risen to what even old Squire Martin pronounced wealth; and, as to social position, he is certainly an object of envy. Slow and steady wins the race, is the motto he impresses upon the mind of each of his children. He that maketh haste to be rich shall not prosper, is one of his favorite proverbs; and when you ask him if he is happier now than when as an humble carpenter and joiner, he ate his dinner every day from a little tin pail upon his work bench, he replies, I don't know that I am. My cup has always been full enough, and, at times during my whole life, seemed running over. I have always restricted my desires to my means, and never lived beyond the same. Life has flowed smoothly with me, perhaps because I have taken advantage of the current, and taken it easy down stream. We can't come to a halt in this life; we are growing older every day; and unless we reap the enjoyments of to-day they will be in our wake to-morrow; and fasting won't make us relish the next any better.

Mrs. Grey is a hale, rosy lady, upon whom dignity cannot be coaxed to sit gracefully, and therefore she never ventures to assume it. She is acknowledged to be the sweetest, kindest-hearted little woman that ever entertained guests, administered to the wants of the poor and suffering, or honored the village festivities with her presence. Her sons are among the most intelligent, and her daughters the fairest in the town in which they live. They are indeed a happy family; and their hospitable roof never yet refused to shelter the most lowly child of misfortune.

But where are the Lincolns? Still keeping up appearances, still harrassed with debt, still delving away, still hoping "it will not always be so," they toil on. The old Squire has at last been accommodating enough to die (so the neighbors are wicked enough to say); and, after the thinly attended funeral is over, the friends and neighbors who are in any way supposed to be interested, assemble to hear the will read. The bulk of the property goes to Cora, of course. But the old Squire's conscience had become a little tender of late; and the amount bequeathed to churches, missionary societies, and benevolent institutions, deducts a fearful sum from the long-expected fortune of the now grasping, miserly Henry Lincoln, whose thin face and hollow eye betoken but a short time for the enjoyment of the wealth he has at last obtained. Cora has lost her early bloom, and looks wan and dispirited. No sweet, prattling voices make music at her hearth; and, alas, the fires of ambition, which she kindled upon the altar of her home, have licked up the last flame of conjugal love! and all her wealth can never make that cold, dreary fireside comfortable, and, after paying up their debts, and making some new investments, the miserable pair return to their toil, which from long habit, has become a second nature to them. In their own estimation, they are still poorer while there is more to be gained, and poor indeed they are in affection, in the blessings of the poor which make rich, in domestic peace, in everything which constitutes earthly happiness, and it is lamentable to look upon them, and contrast their situation, as hopeful, ardent lovers, with their present possession of what might make them so comfortable and happy, if it were not that they have lost the sweet emotions of those days, and unfitted themselves for the enjoyment of the long deferred treasure by spending the best part of their lives in toil, discontent, and meanness, "waiting for a dead man's shoes."

plies, I don't know that I am. My cup has always been full enough, and, at times during my whole life, seemed running over. I have always restricted my desires to my means, and never lived beyond the same. Life has flowed smoothly with me, perhaps because I have taken advantage of the current, and taken it easy down stream. But the old Squire's conscience had become a little tender of late; and the amount bequeathed to churches, missionary societies, and benevolent institutions, deducts a fearful sum from the long-expected fortune of the now grasping, miserly Henry Lincoln, whose thin face and hollow eye betoken but a short time for the enjoyment of the wealth he has at last obtained. Cora has lost her early bloom, and looks wan and dispirited. No sweet, prattling voices make music at her hearth; and, alas, the fires of ambition, which she kindled upon the altar of her home, have licked up the last flame of conjugal love! and all her wealth can never make that cold, dreary fireside comfortable, and, after paying up their debts, and making some new investments, the miserable pair return to their toil, which from long habit, has become a second nature to them. In their own estimation, they are still poorer while there is more to be gained, and poor indeed they are in affection, in the blessings of the poor which make rich, in domestic peace, in everything which constitutes earthly happiness, and it is lamentable to look upon them, and contrast their situation, as hopeful, ardent lovers, with their present possession of what might make them so comfortable and happy, if it were not that they have lost the sweet emotions of those days, and unfitted themselves for the enjoyment of the long deferred treasure by spending the best part of their lives in toil, discontent, and meanness, "waiting for a dead man's shoes."

Life has flowed smoothly with me, perhaps because I have taken advantage of the current, and taken it easy down stream. We can't come to a halt in this life; we are growing older every day; and unless we reap the enjoyments of to-day they will be in our wake to-morrow; and fasting won't make us relish the next any better.

Mrs. Grey is a hale, rosy lady, upon whom dignity cannot be coaxed to sit gracefully, and therefore she never ventures to assume it. She is acknowledged to be the sweetest, kindest-hearted little woman that ever entertained guests, administered to the wants of the poor and suffering, or honored the village festivities with her presence. Her sons are among the most intelligent, and her daughters the fairest in the town in which they live. They are indeed a happy family; and their hospitable roof never yet refused to shelter the most lowly child of misfortune.

But where are the Lincolns? Still keeping up appearances, still harrassed with debt, still delving away, still hoping "it will not always be so," they toil on. The old Squire has at last been accommodating enough to die (so the neighbors are wicked enough to say); and, after the thinly attended funeral is over, the friends and neighbors who are in any way supposed to be interested, assemble to hear the will read. The bulk of the property goes to Cora, of course. the speciality of any one feeling, but the mood and harmony of the whole of them. It is the whole soul marching heavenward to the music of joy and love, with well-ranked faculties, every one of them beating time and keeping tune.

Many people are afraid to embrace religion for fear they shall not succeed in maintaining it.

Does the Spring say, I will not come unless I can bring all fruits and sheaves under my wings? No. She casts down loving glances in February, and in March she ventures near in mild days, but is beaten back and overwhelmed by storm and wind.—Yet she returns, and finally yields the earth to April, far readier for life than she found it. The rains are still cold, but the grass is growing green, and the buds are swelling. In May the air is yet chilly, but it has the odor of flowers, and every day grows warmer till the delicious June, when all is bloom and softness, and even the storms have no punishment in them. Then come the glowing July and the fervid August, followed by the glorious autumn of harvest and victory!

And shall nature do so much, while we dare not attempt to overcome the coldness and deadness of our hearts, and to fill them with the summer of love?

Do not come to me, and tell me you are fit to join the church because you love to pray morning and night. Tell me what your praying has done for you; and then call your neighbors, and let me hear what they think it has done for you.

Punctuation Points.

The points now used in punctuation were introduced into writing gradually, some time after the invention of printing. The Greeks had none, and there was no space between the words. The Romans put a kind of division between the words, thus—Publius Scipio Africanus. Up to the end of the fifteenth century only, the period, colon, and comma had been introduced. The latter came into use latest and was only a perpendicular figure or line proportionate to the size of the letter. To Aldus Manutius, an eminent printer in 1496, we are indebted for the semicolon, and also for the present form of the comma. He also laid down rules now observed in regard to their use. The note of interrogation and exclamation were not added till some years later, and it is not known by whom. Inverted commas (") were first used by M. Gillespie, a French printer, and were intended by him to supersede the use of italic letters; and the French printers now call them by that name. But they are used by English printers to denote quoted matter—in a London Book, "The Art of English Poetry," printed in 1807, it appears that the present mode of denoting quoted matter is therein denoted by being put in italic. It is not known by whom the apostrophe and dash were invented.

The Koran.

The Koran was written about A. D. 610. Its general aim was to unite the professions of idolatry and the Jews and Christians in the worship of one God—whose unity was the chief point inculcated—under certain laws and ceremonies, exacting obedience to Mahomet as prophet. It was written in the Kereish Arabic, and this language, which certainly possesses every fine quality, was said to be that of paradise. Mahomet asserted the Koran was revealed by the angel Gabriel. The style of the volume is beautiful, fluent, and concise; and where the majesty and attributes of God are described it is sublime and magnificent. Mahomet admitted the divine mission both of Moses and Jesus Christ. According to Gibbon, the leading article of faith which Mahomet preached is compounded of eternal truth and a miserable fiction, namely, that there is only one God, and that Mahomet is the apostle of God. The Koran was translated into Latin in 1143, and also into English and European languages about 1762. It is a rhapsody of 3,000 verses, divided into 114 sections.

The Horse Shoe.

A good countryman was taking a rural walk with his son Thomas. As they walked slowly along, the father suddenly stopped.

Look! he said, there's a bit of iron—a piece of a horse shoe; pick it up and put it in your pocket.

Pooh! answered the child, it's not worth stooping for.

The father without uttering a word, picked up the iron, and put it in his pocket.

When they came to the village, he entered the blacksmith's shop, and sold it for three farthings, and with that sum he bought some cherries. Then father and son set off again on their ramble. The sun was burning hot, and neither a house, tree, or fountain of water was in sight. Thomas soon complained of being tired, and had some difficulty in following his father, who walked on with a firm step. Perceiving that his boy was tired, the father let fall a cherry, as if by accident. Thomas stooped and quickly picked it up, and devoured it. A little further, he dropped another, and the boy picked it up as eagerly as ever; and thus they continued, the father dropping the fruit, and the son picking them up. When the last one was eaten the father stopped, and turning to the boy, said:

Look! my son, if you had chosen to stoop once, and pick up a piece of horse shoe, you would not have been obliged at last to stoop so often to pick up the cherries.

REVISED STATUTES. A few weeks since, a copy of the Revised Statutes was taken from our office, doubtless by a Christian friend, and as we have an occasion to use this volume, during our apparent threatened prosecution, we hope they will forthwith return it to this office. Professing Christians know their duty.

FIRE. Last Sunday afternoon, about three o'clock, the old "Church House," as called, in this town, was found to be on fire, occasioned no doubt, by some brush lying beside said building having been set on fire by some children playing with matches. The damage was very trifling.

Last Tuesday morning, about three o'clock, a house on the Weymouth Turnpike, owned by Daniel Baxter, and nearly opposite the residence of Dea. Wm. Pratt, was entirely destroyed. It was unoccupied and had been recently converted into a dwelling house. It was without doubt the work of an incendiary.

"A SMASH UP." A horse attached to a butcher wagon, connected with our friend Wilson's Provision Store, having become frightened from some cause, started upon a run, and in his peregrinations done some damage to Briesler & Co.'s premises, and finally "brought up" with the wreck of the wagon at Hardwick's Express stable, much to the alarm of our worthy friend Bowditch. As above stated, all passed off, thankful that no more injuries were done.

LIFE OF MAJ. GEN. ISRAEL PUTNAM. A very interesting series of biographical sketches of prominent American officers, in the war of the Revolution, is now in course of publication by one of the most enterprising publishing firms in Boston, Messrs. E. O. Libby & Co., Washington street, who, though young in years as well as business, possess the spirit and go-ahead propensities to compete, if not take the lead of their older and heretofore successful rivals. The author of these serial volumes, we believe, is George Canning Hill, whose contributions to many prominent publications have placed him among the leading writers who claim high precedence in American literature. This life of Gen. Putnam is very interesting, and should be read by every true son of liberty and patriotism.

RAILROAD LOCOMOTIVES. The Middleboro' Gazette states that four out of the twenty locomotives belonging to the Old Colony & Fall River Railroad have been changed to coal burners, viz.: the Pilgrim, New York, South Boston, and Richard Borden. A fifth is now in process of transformation. The coal is broken and wet; every few minutes the fireman siffs into the furnace three shovelfuls, keeping it all aglow with white heat. It takes about twenty-five hundred weight of coal to drive an engine from Fall River to Boston and back, which trip may be performed in three hours and twenty minutes. The cost for coal is seven dollars per trip; the cost for wood to create the same power of steam is seventeen dollars. The apparatus got up and patented by the Old Colony Company is being introduced elsewhere.

The New York Travel.

"At this season, large numbers of travelers are wont, for business or pleasure, to tend towards our modern Gotham, says the Norfolk County Journal. To such as are unacquainted with the best route of travel, a word from us, perchance, may be of avail. Our experience of this travel is decidedly in favor of the Norwich & Worcester line, taking steamer to Allyn's Point, and landing at a central pier on the North River side of that city. The equipment of the cars and the steamers are superior; the conductors of the line are gentlemanly and courteous men, and universally popular. The cars are built on a new plan, having sixteen wheels, which, with their large size, make easy riding, and render them safer than those of ordinary construction. The scenery on this route is very attractive. The Commonwealth and Connecticut are superior boats, and are commanded by skillful and experienced officers. The former is the most splendid and convenient boat on the Sound. Her construction throughout was with reference to great strength and safety. She is three hundred and thirty feet in length, forty feet and a half breadth of beam, and seventy-seven feet extreme width. The engine is of twelve hundred horse power, and performs to entire satisfaction. The furniture is substantial and rich, and the saloons high and capacious. The state rooms are large, and are arranged for the comfort and convenience of families. There are one hundred and twenty-five of these, an unusually large number. She has a number of bridal rooms, beautifully decorated and appointed. The beds and berths are of the widest description, and there are most comfortable sleeping arrangements for the repose of six hundred passengers. G. Twichell, Esq., the Superintendent, and President of the Boston & Worcester Railroad, is a veteran railroad manager, and none can surpass him in judgment and experience."

E. S. Martin of New York city, and C. Pratt, Jr. of Boston, are the gentlemanly Agents of this line, and will impart all desirable information to travellers.

GODLEY'S LADY'S BOOK. This most excellent magazine, for July, has been received, which commences a new volume. The embellishments are exceedingly fine, and the matter of that high order characteristic of this magazine. C. Gill & Co., Agents.

GRAND CONCERT. Halls' celebrated Boston Brass Band propose to give one of their musical entertainments, in this place the ensuing week, as will be noted by their advertisement, in another column. To the lovers of rich melody, it will be a treat not often enjoyed in this town.

Summary of Intelligenc.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

A gentleman who recently travelled through the Mohawk Valley (N. THE COAT SOON TURNED. A few evenings since, a party from Boston, who were, perhaps, a little "wide awake," reached home in the last train, and while creating more noise than the peace and quiet of the vicinity required, officer W. M. French, desired all to desist, when a savage assault was made upon him, and he succeeded in arresting some of the noisy ones, and locked them up during the night, and in the morning liberated the incarcerated, believing that the "second sober thought," would have a salutary effect upon their belligerent spirits. But this was not the case, he being soon arrested for an assault, which resulted in his acquittal. Matters now assumed a more tangible shape, and the officer thought it prudent and certainly justifiable in the course he pursued to preserve the public peace, had the parties arrested and tried before Justice Tirrell, who judiciously sentenced the principal as proved to six months in the House of Correction, and failing in the sureties required was committed. The other party who got in had company, was released on payment of fines and costs.

GRAVEL, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, KIDNEY AND BLADDER DYSPEPSIA, FEVER & AGUE.

WOLFE'S KIDNEY & SCHIEDAM Aromatic Schnapps.

THIS Medicinal beverage is manufactured by the proprietor, at Schiedam, Holland, expressly for medicinal use, by a process peculiar to his own Factory. It is pure Tincture of the Italian Juniper Berry, whose more vinous extract is distilled and rectified with its spirituous solvent, which thus becomes a concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and aroma, altogether transcendent in its cordial and medicinal properties to any alcoholic stimulant now made in the world. It is now prescribed by more than 5,000 physicians in the United States, in cases of Gravel, Gout, Dropsy, and Bladder and Kidney Complaints.

Put up in Quart and Pint Bottles, in cases of one dozen quarts, and cases of two dozen pints, and for sale by all the Druggists and Country Merchants.

Poetry.

The Beautiful Land.

There is a land immortal,
The beautiful of lands;
Beside the ancient portal
A sentry grimly stands.
He only can undo it,
And open wide the door;
And mortals who pass through it,
Are mortals never more.

That glorious land is heaven,
And death the entry grim;
The Lord thereof has given
The opening keys to him.
And ransomed spirits sighing
And sorrowing for sin,
Do pass the gate in dying,
And freely enter in.

Though dark and drear the passage,
That leadeth to the gate,
Yet grace comes with the message,
To souls that wait and wait;
And at the time appointed
A messenger comes down,
And leads the Lord's anointed
From the cross to glory's crown.

Their sighs are lost in sighing,
They're blessed in their tears,
Their journey homeward winging,
They leave to earth their fears.
Death like an angel smiling,
"We welcome thee," they cry;
Their face with glory beaming—
"Is not for them to die."

Thy Will be Done.

My God, my Father, while I stray
Far from my home, on life's rough way,
O, teach me from my heart to say,
Thy will be done!

If thou shouldst call me to resign
What most I prize—it never was mine,
I only yield thee what was thine—
Thy will be done!

Should pining sickness waste away
My life in premature decay,
My Father, still I strive to say,
Thy will be done!

E'en if again I never shall see
The friend more dear than life to me,
Ere long we both shall be with thee:
Thy will be done!

If but my fainting heart be blest,
With thy sweet spirit for my guest,
My God, to thee I'll bow the rest,
Thy will be done!

Renew my will from day to day,
Bend it with thine, and take away
All that now maketh it to say,
Thy will be done!

And when on earth I breathe no more
The prayer oft mixed with tears before,
I'll sing upon a happier shore,
Thy will be done!

Only Waiting.

Only waiting till the shadows
Are a little longer grown;
Only waiting till the glimmer
Of the day's last beam is down;
Till the night of earth is frown;
From the heart, once full of day;
Till the stars of heaven are breaking
Through the twilight soft and gray.

Only waiting till the rospers
Have the last shed gathered home;
For the summer-time is faded,
And the Autumn winds have come.
Quickly, rospers! gather quickly
The last ripe hours of my heart;
For the bloom of life is withered,
And I hasten to depart.

Only waiting till the angels
Open wide the mystic gate,
At whose feet I long have lingered,
Weary, poor, and desolate;
Even now I hear the footsteps,
And their voices far away;
If they call me, I am waiting,
Only waiting to obey.

Only waiting till the shadows
Are a little longer grown;
Only waiting till the glimmer
Of the day's last beam is down;
Then from out the gathering darkness
Holy, deathless souls shall rise,
By whose light my soul shall gladly
Tread its pathway to the skies.

Books.

A blessing on the printer's art,
Books are the warriors of the heart.
The burning soul, the burdened mind,
In books alone companions find.
We never speak our deepest feelings;
Our holiest hopes have no revealing;
Save in the gleams that light the face,
Or flames that make the pen my trace.
And hence to books the heart must turn
When with unspoken thoughts we yearn.

Anecdotes.

A wagish fellow, who was troubled with an impediment in his speech, while one day sitting at a public table, had occasion to use a pepper-box. After shaking it with all due vehemence, and turning it in various ways, he found that the crushed pepper-corns were not inclined to come forth.

T-t-h-i-s p-p-p-e-p-p-e-r box, he exclaimed with a facetious grin, is something like myself.

Why so, asked a friend.

P-p-poor delivery, said he.

A drummer, who now and then indulged in a noogie of right good potene, was accosted by the reviewing general—

Pat, what makes your nose so red?

Please your honor, I always blush when I speak to an officer.

A very small pattern of a man lately solicited the hand of a fine, buxom girl.

O, no, said the fair lady, I can't think of it for a moment. The fact is, Tommy, you are a little too big to put in a cradle, and a little too small to put in a bed.

COMPLETE
Dental Establishment.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG,
SURGEON DENTISTS,
25 Tremont Street, (up stairs,) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from use to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benumbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparative ease and pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often-times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is a laborious and delicate process, and the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystalline Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay and partially restored, but verily restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulvulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is used to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

WEYMOUTH LANDING, May, 16.

DR. S. STOCKING,
DENTAL SURGEON

No. 19 Tremont Row, (up stairs,) Boston.
Directly opposite the head of Brattle Street, BOSTON.

CONTINUES to perform all operations on the teeth, such as filling, setting, cleansing, regulating, and extracting, on such terms as make his services accessible to all. Having carefully selected, from the great mass of what are called modern improvements in Dentistry, whatever is of real value; and combining such improvements with the experience of more than twenty years of close application to the duties of the profession he may be permitted to say that whatever pertains to the dental profession, whether mechanical or surgical, he is fully competent to perform. To do justice, and give satisfaction in all cases that come under the supervision of the dentist, though often attended with some difficulty, should be the aim and study of all who assume the responsibility of the care of the teeth; and the failure of so many in accomplishing what they promise—though honest in their intentions, and desiring to do good—must be attributed, either to their ignorance of the principle upon which dental operations are based, or the want of experience and ingenuity to apply them. Take, for instance, the nice operation of plugging a tooth—a process of great apparent simplicity, yet it is the most difficult of execution, and important in its consequences, of any within the range of operative dentistry. So true is this, that not more than one in twenty who belong to the profession, is qualified to fill a tooth. And so, with all great care, especially whole and half sets, where correct taste and sound judgment are required in combination with skill in mechanism. There is, however, still another item embraced in the qualifications and services of the dentist, of paramount importance, which is called for at the present day, in administering either for the removal of teeth. The natural teeth may be improperly filled, and even ruined; artificial ones may be badly set, and fail to answer the purpose for which they were made; but neither life nor health is thereby endangered. Not so in the administration of ether. It is an agent that should be confined to the care and control of intelligent men, who have learned its peculiarities and effects on the human system. The use of a sponge or cloth in the administration, though a little more convenient for the administrator, is not, by any means, the best medium. Ether should be so administered as to prevent the air once breathed from entering the lungs a second time. The reason for this has its foundation in the laws of chemical combination from the nature of this remarkable property, it is used to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystalline Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay and partially restored, but verily restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure.
